Duce's War Aim Is Not Justified, Britain Asserts

'Ethiopians Wrong, But War No Cure'

The Italo-Ethiopian Crisis.

Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary, questioned the justification of Italy's Ethiopian campaign in an address before the House of Commons.

The Italian press continued its attack against Britain and the League of Nations for their intervention in the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

In Geneva league officials, foreseeing an extraordinary council session shortly, still hope for arbitration.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 11.—A tense House of Commons today heard Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, question the validity of Italy's reasons for attacking Ethiopia.

"We admit the need for Italian expansion," Sir Samuel said, "We admit again the justice of some criticism that has been made against the Ethiopian government, but are the facts of Italy's needs and the complaints made against the Ethiopian government sufficient cause for plunging into war?"

Pledging Britain's continued efforts for peace and reaffirming her traditional friendship with France, the foreign secretary pleaded for Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler's cooperation in pacifying turbulent central and eastern Europe through the negotiation of eastern and Danubian pacts.

Visions Aid to Air Pact.

"Let him take the next necessary step forward to help in the negotiation of eastern and Danubian pacts, thereby giving a great impulse to the conclusion of an air pact," he said.

Diplomats of France, Italy and many other nations sat in the packed galleries to hear Sir Samuel, in his maiden speech before the Commons as foreign secretary, review Britain's efforts to settle Italo-Ethiopian differences, defend them as necessary in view of the effeect war would have on collective peace systems and urge, by indirection, Anglo-American co-operation in world problems.

Particularly vigorous was his defense of the recently concluded Anglo-German naval agreement, which drew sharp criticism from France.

"I am bold enough to believe," the foreign secretary said, "that when the world looks more dispassionately at the results, the overwhelming majority of those who stand for peace and for the restriction of armaments will say that the British government took not only the wise course but the only course open."

Understands Italy's Needs.

Speaking slowly and with emphasis when he came to the grave African situation, Sir Samuel assured Italy that Britain understood her needs for overseas expansion, but questioned whether that need and Italy's complaints justified resort to war, with all war might imply for the future of the League of Nations and collective peace systems.

He promised England would not abandon "any reasonable chance which may offer itself for helping prevent a disastrous war," although he denied rumors that France had been asked to help blockade Italy or that Britain was preparing "some isolated form of coercion."

"When I say collective responsibility (for peace)," he said with emphasis, "I mean collective responsibility."

The foreign secretary lashed out at "wild statements" in the Italian press questioning the motives of Britain's peace efforts, asserting Britain had only "the motives of peaceful settlement," and declaring "statements that we are thinking of our colonial interests or massing troops in the neighboring British

British, French Envoys, Hull Discuss Crisis

Italian Ambassador Also Tells State Department About Ethiopia.

By the Associated Press.

American interest in the Italo-Ethiopian crisis was emphasized yesterday when both Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, and Andre de Laboulaye, the French Ambassador, called at the State Department to exchange information with Secretary Hull and Undersecretary Phillips.

Secretary Hull said he had asked the envoys to come to the State Department to give him any information they might wish concerning the critical situation involving Ethiopia. No indication was given that any co-operative action was under consideration, however. Great Britain and France are among the signers of the Kellogg-Briand peace pact. They also were members, with Italy, of an agreement of 1906, since abrogated, which set up divided spheres of influence in Abyssinia.

On the heels of a conference with the Italian Ambassador involving the Italo-Ethiopian situation, Secretary Hull reiterated the United States' anxiety over the preservation of world peace. Neither Hull nor Ambassador Rosso would say what passed between them other than to admit that the African crisis was one of the topics.

Hull's public comment on the peace preservation policy, coupled with his talk with Rosso, gave rise to a belief that he diplomatically hinted to the Italian envoy that the United States would view a war in Ethiopia—or elsewhere—as a serious matter in world affairs.

It also was believed that Hull expressed to Rosso the hope that a peaceful solution still could be reached in the crisis and the integrity of peace treaties, including the Kellogg-Briand pact, preserved.

Diplomatic quarters here and in Rome, however, offered no confirmation of the impression that either a formal or informal communication had been passed to Italy. Ambassador Rosso told newspapermen he had discussed the Ethiopian crisis only as one of sev-

Pearson Held Ready to Quit Islands Post

Hearings End Abruptly After Series of White House Conferences.

By Felix Bruner.

Reports that both Gov. Paul M. Pearson and Judge T. Webber Wilson, of the Virgin Islands, would resign persisted last night in the face of impenetrable official silence that followed President Roosevelt's entry into the bitter controversy that has developed as a result of the Senate investigation into conditions in the islands.

Committee hearings were abruptly suspended without explanation following a series of conferences at the White House. The conferences followed exchange of scorching letters between Secretary Ickes, who has general supervision over the government of territories and possessions, and Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, chairman of the investigating committee.

At 9 a. m. President Roosevelt sent for Ickes, who in his letter to Tydings had charged "whitewash" and perjury in connection with the hearing. Ickes remained for half an hour.

The Secretary's visit was immediately followed by arrival of Senator Tydings, who was joined in a few minutes by Senator Robinson, Democratic floor leader, and Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi. They remained for an hour.

Tydings hurried from the White House to the Senate Office Building, where he suspended the hearing. He told all witnesses to be ready to return. Later he indicated the hearing would be resumed next week with a view to obtaining legislation beneficial to the islands.

Ickes returned to the White House for lunch. Leaving, he denied that the Virgin Island situation had been discussed during either of his visits. He insisted that the discussion had concerned the bill to change the name of the Interior Department to the Department of Conservation and Public Works.

Every Move Guarded.

Every move in connection with the controversy was carefully guarded. Seldom has such a thick wall of silence been thrown around an Administration move. The only official statement, or even admission that the Virgin Island situation was under consideration came from Senator Robinson as he left the White House. He said:

"We discussed various phases of the Virgin Island situation. I have no details to announce."

It is believed that when the hearings are resumed they will take a new turn. Thus far the committee has heard only complaints against the administration of Gov. Pearson. The recess came just as Paul Yates, former assistant to Pearson and his principal accuser, ended his testimony.

Peculiar Legal Code.

Many of the complaints concerning conditions in the islands, according to some observers, have come as a result of the peculiar legal code that governs them. The courts there do not function under the Federal laws, but under a conglomeration of local laws, the Danish legal code, and the common law of England. It is possble that the committee may go into the matter of clarifying this situation.

The controversy between Ickes and Tydings has a political significance that is far more serious than the comparative unimportance of Virgin Island jobs would indicate, and it threatens the harmony of President Roosevelt's official family.

Gov. Pearson, a Republican, was appointed by President Hoover. He has been almost constantly under fire since his appointment. Nevertheless Ickes has staunchly defended him, even to the point of risking his own political future and his position in the Cabinet. At the same time Ickes has as consistently opposed Judge Wilson, a Democrat, appointed by Attorney General Cummings. His appointment

Nudism From Pennsylvania

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, July 11.—Miss Joan Warner, of Narberth, Pa., will find out next week just what the French law thinks of her continuing in the nude when she dances in Paris.

She and numerous other persons testified concerning her dancing in somewhat hilarious court proceedings today during which a judge announced that nakedness did not shock him and in which it was indicated that Joan's act was not considered immoral.

A charge of "offending public modesty" was brought against the tall American blonde by the Association for the Increase of the French Population.

Miss Warner spoke in her own behalf with what the French spectators called "a delicious American accent."

"Everything is absolutely chaste in my dance number," she testified. "I am covered from head to foot with white make-up. An invisible lavender silk cloth covered me in my absolutely correct positions.

M. Bauverat, vice president of the plaintiff association, was not so sure about all that covering. He testified he saw Miss Warner dance in a fashionable restaurant here and "if she wore any clothes, they were so small I couldn't see them." He asked that Miss Warner be punished "for the principle of the thing."

Madame Titayna, the French writer, told of finding "spectacles a good deal more shocking in the United States."

A Hero's Grave.

TURNING hero worship into practical channels, kindly Washingtonians yesterday saved the body of Sterling Calhoun from a pauper's grave in potter's field.

The 32-year-old Negro lost his life in a futile attempt to rescue two white children—Mary and Richard Kerns—from drowning in the Anacostia River.

Calhoun's funeral will be private and paid for out of unds that are pouring in on his widow, the mother of three small children.

Late yesterday individuals had contributed more than $50, while the Washington Daily News and the Evening Star had given $100 each. Much of this money will go direct to Mrs. Calhoun, who is destitute, since she and her family and her hero-husband were on relief.

Yesterday the body of Calhoun lay in the Barnes & Matthews undertaking establishment. Funeral services will be in the Little Bethlehem Baptist Mission Church Sunday at 1:30 p. m.

Contributions came to Mrs. Calhoun yesterday, and she was grateful for them, as one of her children is seriously ill.

"I just haven't got a thing," said she tearfully yesterday. "Every little bit helps."

House Enacts TVA Changes By 277-100

Administration Winner of Nearly All Power It Demanded.

Conferee Coup Planned to Preserve 'Death Sentence' Clause.

By Robert C. Albright.

Another parliamentary coup to strengthen the Administration's conference position on "death-sentence" features of the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding company bill will be attempted today in the House, it was learned last night.

This unusual strategy calls for appointment of six House conferees on the bill, to be divided three and three on the "death sentence" issue, it was said. Four of the five conferees already named by the Senate are for the dissolution proviso.

Meanwhile, the Senate ordered its own investigation of all lobbying and the House Rules Committee pointed its inquisitorial searchlight on the Washington power lobby, and its reputed quarters in the Mayflower Hotel.

To Scan Hotel Records.

"We will probably subpena all records of the Mayflower Hotel, where it is alleged the power lobby has its headquarters," Chairman John J. O'Connor, of the Rules Committee said.

"We want to find out who was there while the utilities bill was before Congress, and how much money they spent, particularly on entertainment."

This announcement followed a late afternoon executive session of the committee, when it was decided to swiftly wind up hearings on charges that Thomas G. Corcoran, New Deal attorney, attempted to influence the "death sentence" vote of Representative Ralph O. Brewster (Republican), of Maine.

Developments followed swiftly after passage of the Administration's TVA amendments, with virtually all of the increased powers asked by the President. The vote for passage was 278 to 100, after a motion to recommit the bill failed, 202 to 274.

Developments of Day.

These were the developments:

The House Rules Committee decided to hear only rebuttal witnesses on the Corcoran-Brewster incident, and to conclude this phase of the inquiry Tuesday.

Letters were ordered sent to every member of Congress, requesting them to supply the Rules Committee with names, addresses and even documentary proof of power lobbying, as the Rules Committee decided to inquire immediately into utility company pressure.

Speaker Byrns issued orders to doorkeepers of the Speakers' lobby, to enforce the rules against entry of anyone not entitled to admission. His instructions followed Rules Committee testimony that Corcoran had access to the lobby, and posted anti-power company charts there.

The Senate approved the Black resolution, appropriating $50,000 for lobbying on the holding company bill and other measures, after refusing to broaden the investigation to specifically provide for inquiry into motives behind the recent farmers' march on Washington.

Vice President Garner appointed Senator Hugo L. Black (Democrat), of Alabama, chairman of the Senate lobby investigating committee. Black will be assisted by a liberal group comprising Senators Minton, of Indiana, and Schwellenbach, of Washington (Democrats), and Frazier, of North Dakota, and Gibson, of Vermont (Republicans). Ford Sees Wealth Tax Failure, Denies There Are 'Rich' to Soak

Auto Maker Expects New Era to Emerge From Confusion.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Detroit, Mich., July 11.—Henry Ford looks upon the American scene of today as one of momentary confusion and darkness, with the sun of a new era of brilliant technical and sound social advance visible on the horizon. Nothing will obscure this light permanently, he thinks, least of all the politician sin Washington.

Mr. Ford expressed his opinions on industrial and social affairs today to this correspondent. He has kept silence during the slow waning of the NRA and the efforth to "crack down" on his and bring him into line in a policy which he felt was wrong. Now that that has failed and a new effort begun, that of the "share the wealth" taxation plans of the New Dealers, he feels that the psychological time has come to talk to the American people. They will not long be deceived as to their true welfare, he thinks.

"The proposed share the wealth taxes will not share the wealth and there are no rich to soak," he said. "They are a figment of political imagination on the one hand and a new form of destruction on the other."

Sitting in the office of his public relations counselor, W. J. Cameron, in the engineering laboratory where he does most of his work, the master of the greatest industrial empire ever built by one man said of this "new form of destruction," which he considers as aimed chiefly at his organization:

"We do not intend to be destroyed."

He appeared unworried, as though he had stepped aside for a moment from more important problems to consider some lesser thing.

"I have never objected to paying taxes," he continued, "but I do object to Government eating up the real wealth of this country on the pretext of giving it back to the peo-

Not More Taxes on Income but More Income to Tax, Says Chamber.

Hastings Assails Program in Senate

President's Motive Lies in Changing Social Order, He Says.

American business yesterday opened a concerted, Nation-wide attack upon President Roosevelt's tax program.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, declaring that the most urgent need at the present time is "not more taxes on income, but more income to tax," announced it was starting a drive against the program in every section of the country.

At the same time, the powerful E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. sent to its stockholders a statement of the National Association of Manufacturers calling for "a Nation-wide universal volume of protest from industrial stockholders throughout the United States." Stockholders were asked to communicate their views to members of Congress.

Calling the proposed taxes destructive and confiscatory, a committee of the Chamber of Commerce issued a detailed report which is being sent to the organization's membership of 1,500, composed of leading business organizations and businessmen throughout the country.

Hastings Leads Debate.

Meanwhile, debate on the tax program broke out in the Senate, led by Senator Hastings (Republican), Delaware, who declared, President Roosevelt is "much more interested in changing the social order than he is in raising revenue." The House Ways and Means Committee, unable to find witnesses, suspended its tax hearings until today. Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce will appear before the committee tomorrow.

"More income means more purchasing power for the consumers and more revenue for the Government," the chamber statement said. "Efforts to obtain restoration of the income that our people have enjoyed in past years are directly affected by the tax policies of Government.

"In view of the shrunken income, the losses yet to be recouped, and the present methods of imposing taxes, the rates and effects of general tax policies now in force already bear too heavily upon the type of personal and corporate enterprise that must be depended upon to produce recovery."

Leaders Sign Report.

The committee report was signed by Fred H. Clausen, president of the VanBrunt Manufacturing Co., Horicon, Wis.; E. C. Alvord, of Washington; Samuel F. Clabaugh, president of the Protective Life Insurance Co., Birmingham, Ala.; Samuel C. Dobbs, president of the Dobbs Mortgage & Investment Co., Atlanta, Ga.; Fred R. Fairchild, professor of political economy at Yale; Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago; Robert P. Page, president of the Autocar Co., Ardmore, Pa., and James Ringold, president of the United States National Bank of Denver.

The committee held that the tax proposals are of a destructive nature because they are based solely on the idea that large enterprises, estates and incomes should be taxed heavily merely because of size, without sufficient attention to utility or economic value of aggregations of capital.

Breaking up larger units of business, thereby compelling the business of the country to be carried on by small concerns, would be economic retrogression, the committee said.

The committee pointed to estimated revenues from proposed taxes as evidence of the futility of the program. It declared that if all net incomes over $1,000,000 were confiscated, the Government would

Federal Court Doubts Validity Of AAA Taxes

Refuses to Dismiss Writ Restraining Collection 14 Firms Obtained.

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, July 11.—A three-judge tribunal of the Federal District Court today held "there was probable cause to believe" the AAA processing taxes were unconstitutional and refused to rescind a temporary order barring their collection from 14 large milling concerns and two co-plaintiffs.

Declining the Government's motion to dismiss petitions of the firms, the court decided their pleas for permanent injunctions and a testing of the constitutionality of the agricultural adjustment act would be heard at its September term.

The court, which included Judges M. M. Joyce, Joseph Molyneaux and Gunnar H. Nordbye, gave the petitioners, several of whom had made an issue of only one month's taxes, the additional right to apply for an extension of the injunctions due in subsequent months. The suits covered more than $1,000,000 in taxes owed as of July 1.

In declining United States District Attorney George Sullivan's request for the vacation of the temporary writs, the court agreed:

"The so-called tax is imposed to raise funds, not for the support of Government, but for the benefit of a private class of individuals; it is an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to regulate production within the States," and "an unlaw-

Curtail Power Of High Court, Lewis Advises

New Dealist Outlines Plan; Liberty League Lawyer Retorts.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., July 11.—Demands that the Supreme Court be sharply restricted in its jurisdiction over the constitutionality of acts of Congress and a stanch defense of the existing system as "our only bulwark against modern false panaceas" today again held the attention of the University of Virginia's Institute of Public Affairs.

Seldom has a more fundamental issue, one of more far-reaching importance to the American people and one which may rock the Nation in the next two years, been discussed than was the topic today at Thomas Jefferson's University, not far from Monticello where he wrote the original draft of the Declaration of Independence.

Except that both sides invoked the philosophy of Jefferson to support their beliefs, the lines in today's debate were closely drawn and sharply defined. It was a clash between those who regard the Supreme Court as an obstacle to social and economic progress and those who regard it as the protector of minorities against the emotionalism and recklessness of Congress.

Speaking for the New Deal, the diminutive, but earnest Representative Davis J. Lewis (Democrat), of Maryland, contended that the Su-

Hoover Says Man Taken in New York Demanded Total of $465,000; Prisoner Is Parolee From Sing Sing and Has Been on Emergency Relief.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., July 11.—J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, disclosed tonight that his aids had trapped a "particularly vicious" criminal who harassed seven families of missing or kidnaped persons with ransom demands totaling $465,000.

The man, Alfred Otto Wagner, 38-year-old former convict, was arrested yesterday in Brooklyn, Hoover said. When he kept a rendezvous in an attempt to collect his latest demand for $75,000.

In not one case, Hoover said, did the man succeed in collecting any money, but in several instances his letters terrified his victims and confused the investigating officials.

Hoover said Wagner demanded the full $200,000 which the kidnapers of 9-year-old George Weyerhaeuser sought from the Tacoma (Wash.) lumber heir's family. Mrs. Margaret Waley is now on trial in the abduction and her husband, Harmon Waley, is under sentence of 45 years in prison while another man is still being sought.

Hoover's announcement came at the conclusion of the annual convention of the International Association of Chiefs of Police when the youthful chief of the "G men" summoned reporters to his hotel.

Other cases in which Wagner's letters figured and the amounts which he sought, Hoover said, included:

The disappearance of Dorothy Ann Distelhurst, of Nashville, Tenn., later found slain—$50,000.

The kidnaping of William Weiss, of Philadelphia, also slain—$50,000.

The disappearance of 5-year-old Jackie Kaul, of New York, whose body was later found in the East River—$15,000.

The kidnaping of Mrs. Berry Stoll, of Kentucky, for which Thomas Robinson, jr., is still being sought—$50,000.

The disappearance of Mrs. Ann Booth Gordon, of Connecticut, later found drowned in the Connecticut River—$25,000.

Rains May End Midwest Heat; Mercury Climbs to 92 Here

Sizzling temperatures toasted the Nation yesterday as the July heat wave's death toll mounted to 44 and rural and urban dwellers in the Middle West heard from the Weather Bureau the cheering news that today might be cooler.

As a definite break in the torrid spell was indicated for the more Northern States, the mercury soared to a maximum of 92 at 3 p. m. in Washington, its peak for the month.

In New York the year's high mark was shattered by a recording of 90 degrees, with only slight breezes fanning the metropolis.

Two June days have been hotter in Washington than yesterday. There were practically no winds, only gentle, sultry southerly puffs of warm air. Yesterday's minimum was 72 at 3 a. m.

No heat prostrations were reported to police or the hospitals here, although, with the temperature at 89 late yesterday afternoon, the humidity was 56.

No relief was promised Washington by the forecaster, who predicted last night that fair weather and continued heat would stir the Capital today. There is a possibility of fitful showers late this afternoon.

The summer sun baked the ground to hard clay. Golfers noticed extensive "rolls" on their tee shots and approaches. Beer gardens, fruit juice stands and ice cream parlors did a rush business. Out in the Southeast and Southwest sections colored "snowball" vendors peddled their gayly colored ices from push carts.

Since the heat wave began July 1, Oklahoma has reported 9 deaths; Texas 9, Kansas 7, Missouri 5, Nebraska 5, Minnesota 4, Arkansas 3 and Iowa and Illinois 1 each. An Associated Press tabulation reported in addition to these heat deaths 12 persons have drowned in four States in recent days.

2 Airmen Set to Climb 14 Miles Into the Stratosphere at Dawn

By the Associated Press.

Rapid City, S. D., July 11.—From a rock-walled, circular canyon in South Dakota's Black Hills the world's largest free balloon will rise between 3 and 4 a. m. tomorrow, carrying two Army officers on a 12-to-14-hour flight into the deadly thin air 14 miles up.

Delayed since June 3, principally by unfavorable weather, inflation of the huge balloon of the exploration expedition of Capt. Orvil A. Anderson, 40, and Capt. Albert W. Stevens, 40, was begun at 6:45 p. m., Mountain time.

The flight base meteorological station's prediction of fair weather tomorrow in the area of probable drift—several hundred miles to the southeast—was the signal for excited activity at "Stratto-Camp," 11 miles southwest of here.

A crew of expert handlers pulled the 3,700,000-cubic foot bag from its crate, preparatory to inflation with helium to about one-eighth its capacity.

Capt. Stevens and cooperating scientists supervised last-minute inspection of the nine-foot, air-tight metal gondola in which the two men will ride surrounded by more than a ton of delicate instruments.

Liquid oxygen and liquid nitrogen were mixed to provide an air supply inside the locked metal ball. An emergency supply, extra rich in oxygen, was arranged to sustain life should leakage occur. The gondola will be closed at about 13,000 feet on the ascent, and opened at perhaps 20,000 feet coming down.

Last summer, Capt. Stevens, commander, scientific observer and photographer, and Capt. Anderson, the pilot, barely escaped death by leaping with parachutes after their balloon ripped at 60,000 feet in a similar flight.

AAA Proposals Are Denounced By Publishers

Group Says Amendments Constitute Open Challenge to Recovery.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 11.—Executive officers of seven major associations of advertisers and publishers joined tonight in a statement terming proposed amendments to the agricultural adjustment act "an open challenge to the economic recovery of this country; an inevitable obstruction to recovery."

Heading the signers was Jerome D. Barnum, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, who has engaged in a vigorous debate on the AAA amendments with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace.

The other signers were Allyn B. McIntire, president, Association of National Advertisers; W. B. Warner, president, National Publishers Association (magazines and periodicals); John Benson, president, American Association of Advertising Agencies; Harry J. Prudden, Newspaper Representatives Association of New York; George J. Auer, Newspaper Advertising Executives Association, and Everit B. Terhune, president, Associated Business Papers, Inc.

Statement Issued.

The statement, issued after a meeting of the group, follows:

"The bill to amend the agricultural adjustment act, now being debated in the United States Senate, is a grave threat to the entire economic structure of this country.

"This bill vests in one individual, the Secretary of Agriculture, power to legislate the conditions under which practically all agricultural products may be produced and distributed.

"It gives to this individual power to designate markets for such products, to limit the quantity of such products that may go into such markets, to grade the products produced and distributed, to fix the prices thereon, and to levy a tax on consumers thereof.

"It contains the outrageous provision that if it be held unconstitutional, taxes collected under its provisions shall not be repaid to those from whom they were illegally collected.

"Further, it vests in the Secretary of Agriculture power to determine what other products compete with agricultural products and to deal with them accordingly.

"It abandons the theory of the existing law to give the farmer equality of purchasing power and sets up in its place a system of centralized control and taxation on practically all agricultural products and those products, such as rayon, which compete with them.

"The bill places exorbitant taxes on the very necessities of life—food, shelter, furniture and clothing—ranging as high as 125 per cent on some of these items.

"It strikes the working man and woman, the wage-earner, the very hardest.

"It contains the power not only to regulate and restrict advertising of all commodities embraced in its sweeping provisions, but to prohibit advertising.

"It threatens the existence of the newspapers, the magazines and the radio, and all other forms of commercial printing and advertising.

Imperils Workers.

"It imperils the jobs of hundreds of thousand of employes of newspapers, magazines and radio stations.

"It endangers the very life of some of our greatest manufacturing industries, such as the millers, the packers, the canners, and the tobacco manufacturers, as well as the security of their employes.

"By its power to regulate distribution and allocate markets, it threatens our transportation system, on water and on land.

"In fact, it is an open challenge to the economic recovery of this country; an inevitable obstruction to recovery.

"The measure must be beaten."

Garner Names Three To Probe Wool Marts

By the Associated Press.

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, was named by Vice President Garner yesterday as chairman of a special committee of five to investigate the activities of wool dealers. Other members named were Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico; Murray (Democrat), of Montana; Steiwer (Republican), of Oregon, and Carey (Republican), of Wyoming.

Adams and Steiwer proposed the investigation, complaining dealers on the Boston market were selling their own holdings on a rising market and those supplied them by the growers when prices were on the decline.

U. S. Weighing Move For Langer Retrial

Attorney General Cummings said yesterday the Justice Department would not appeal the case against former Gov. William Langer of North Dakota to the Supreme Court, but it was undecided whether to seek a retrial.

Langer was convicted of conspiracy to solicit political contribution from Government workers. The Circuit Court of Appeals, however, set aside the conviction.

The Attorney General said the District Court in North Dakota will make a survey of the evidence before the decision on a retrial.

Hull Sets Italy Straight; Arms Makers Face Disappointment; Lobby Quiz Has Hard Job.

By Raymond Clapper

In a quiet way Secretary of State Hull has tipped off Mussolini that this Government is not happy over the way he is proceeding to war with Ethiopia.

Probably it was not put quite that bluntly, but Secretary Hull is a plain-spoken man from Tennessee and it can safely be assumed that he made his point clear within the restraints of diplomatic formalities.

He found it necessary to set Italy straight because of the widespread misinterpretation of his recent note to the Emperor of Ethiopia, who had asked the American Government to examine means of securing observance of the Kellogg anti-war pact.

Secretary Hull replied that the United States was gratified that the League of Nations was attempting to adjust the controversy, hoped that the arbitration would succeed, and was loath to believe either government would resort to other than peaceful means, or would permit any situation to arise which would be inconsistent with the pledges of both nations under the Kellogg anti-war pact.

Secretary Hull, it now appears, thought he was thus giving notice to Italy as well as to Ethiopia that the United States looked with disfavor upon any war or threat of war. The fact that he made the note public was intended to indicate that the sentiments expressed were for Italy's ears as well as Ethiopia's.

However, that was not the general interpretation placed upon the note by the newspapers and the public generally, much to the disappointment of the State Department. The note was regarded as a simple hands-off reply in which the United States politely washed its hands of the controversy.

Therefore Secretary Hull undertook to correct the misimpression. He did not want the record to stand leaving any idea that the United States was complacently giving Italy the wink.

He asked the Italian Ambassador to come to see him. They had a long talk. Neither would say much about it, except that the Ethiopian situation was discussed. But you can safely bet that if the Italian Ambassador's full report of the conversation has reached Rome by now, Mussolini knows that the United States Government doesn't think much of the way he is acting.

Also, American munitions manufacturers who are sharpening pencils in anticipation of taking orders from the prospective belligerents might as well stick to making plowshares. This Government's attitude is running strongly against export of arms for an African war. It stopped export of arms to the Chaco.

Early enactment of munitions licensing is desired by the Administration. This would require a public record under license control of all manufacture, export and import of munitions.

Meantime the State Department and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are collaborating on an inclusive program of neutrality legislation, which, some of those interested hope, will not only redefine neutral rights but give the Government authority to control movement of citizens, capital and goods where nations at war are involved. The State Department has proceeded too leisurely with its studies of this highly technical matter to please many who are interested. It is doubtful if such general legislation can be enacted before the next session. By that time the Ethiopian war probably will be on, if not over.

Meantime, however, the Government has a partial weapon in the old war-time espionage act which never has been repealed. It permits the President to prohibit military secrets from going out of the country. Where munitions contain military secrets, their export could be prohibited. This statute was used by the President in sequestering gold when he declared the bank holiday. As a stop-gap, it might also serve for the Ethiopian situation.

The Senate lobby investigation, which has been broadened to include all lobbying, has a long job cut out for it. Ever since the lobbying over the utilities bill came under fire, opponents of the AAA amendments have put on a high-pressure campaign, and now stockholders in large corporations are receiving literature against the Administration tax proposals. A nation-wide universal volume of protest from industrial stockholders throughout the United States is called for. Stockholders are urged to wire and write their Representatives and Senators.

The fact is that when people think their interests are endangered by proposed legislation, they are going to oppose it and flood Congress with as much protest as possible—investigation or no investigation.

About all Congress can hope to do is to ferret out flagrant cases and abuses of the right of petition and, by publicity, try to maintain a code of fair practices in lobbying.

Political Parades: President Roosevelt doesn't think he has slipped so much. He has reports of a canvass in Ohio showing that sentiment toward the Administration stacks up thus: business men, 9 out of 10 against him; farmers, 4 out of 7 for him; labor, 7 out of 8 for him. He is especially cheered over the farmers. Ohio, a State of diversified farming, has not been so lavishly showered with AAA benefit payments as the big wheat and corn-hog States. If he holds better than half in Ohio he figures farm States generally will be still stronger . . . The Republican national committee will begin its 1936 drive through small weekly newspapers. It intends to dig in first in the grass roots. Republicans figure Roosevelt is doing more big-time publicity for them than they could themselves . . . Democratic national committee fund collectors report that recent Administration policies have caused big prospects to close up like a Scotch congregation at collection time . . . Ray Moley is urging the White House to ease up and give the country a rest, the Tory . . . When Arizona voters threatened to recall Senators Ashurst and Hayden because they voted to uphold the bonus veto, the chairman of the Senate Privileges and Elections Committee prepared a brief showing that it would be unconstitutional for a State to recall a Senator or Representative. That's one proposition which will be supported unanimously in both Houses . . . Mrs. Roosevelt is trying to keep out of the newspapers . . . A Yale man's proudest boast: Franklin Roosevelt went to Harvard.

"With enactment of his proposed legislation," said the court, "there will be summarily withdrawn any such opportunity for legal remedy for a refund of taxes improperly assessed and paid.

"Plaintiffs are placed in a dilemma from which the only means of relief is invoking the equitable jurisdiction of this court," said the opinion.

"Common prudence justifies the apprehension that the uncontroverted status of the bill creates an imminent threat to the rights of these plaintiffs and, therefore, is presented an appropriate case for the exercise of the equitable protection of the court."

Cotton, Tobacco Crop Acts Extended by Senate for a Year.

By the Associated Press.

Administration efforts to block farm processing tax suits yesterday were assailed as "tyranny" and "dishonesty" by a fighting Senate opposition.

Scarcely a murmur of discussion attended approval of amendments to the AAA bill extending for another year the cotton and tobacco control acts.

But Senators on both sides of the chamber stormed at the processing tax sections especially written to clinch the constitutionality of the crops control program.

Senator Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, in charge of the bill, said there was no justice in permitting processing companies or others to sue for recovery of fixed taxes by Secretary Wallace. But Smith frankly was startled when confronted with a section in the complex measure denying all persons the right to go to court to restrain collection in the future of processing taxes prescribed under the act.

Borah Seeks Change.

Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, introduced amendments to strike out of the bill both the sections denying tax recovery suits and the section blocking future injunction actions against the taxes. Then he proposed eliminating a third section legalizing all processing taxes heretofore applied by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Smith vehemently insisted that the processors in most cases had already passed on the tax to consumers or had deducted it from prices paid the growers. But Borah countered that some no doubt had been unable to do so and now would be denied the right of courts to determine whether the tax itself is legal.

"Can you go out," he asked, "and take property illegally from a citizen (by taxes) and then come and declare it was legal?

"That is the very essence of tyranny."

"That would be dishonest," added Senator George (Democrat), Georgia.

Both Borah and George conceded it would be proper to permit the Government in such tax suits to prove that the tax had been passed off by the processor either upon the grower or consumer as a defense against damage suits.

Senator Schall (Republican), Minnesota, declared the whole scheme of AAA would collapse in the courts and branded it a "Soviet measure."

"You might as well abolish the Department of Justice and the courts as restrain citizens from tax suits," said Senator Dickinson (Republican), Iowa.

Borah conceded that there was ground for the doctrine of denying individuals the right to sue the sovereign but objected that recently it was being "extended into many lines, and it is a right that should seldom be denied."

Cotton Act Extended.

But with the flurry over the tax problem temporarily brushed aside, the Senate promptly voted to extend through the 1937-38 crop year the Bankhead cotton control act and voted a similar one year extension to the Kerr-Smith tobacco control act, both aimed at crop control through quota assignments and application of the processing tax.

Meanwhile Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, proposed to restore a section approved by the House, but stricken out by the Senate Agriculture Committee permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to use 30 per cent of the Nation's customs receipts to build up foreign trade along lines of the export debenture system. Since Smith had protested such a measure would create a wall of sales resistance abroad against American cotton, Connally proposed exempting cotton.

Concluding the day's debate, Smith appealed for a vote on the AAA bill by tonight, commenting that he hoped "all the long speeches were finished."

Shoe Production Lower.

New York, July 11 (AP).—Boot and shoe production in May, as reported by the trade to the Commerce Department, totaled 30,029,890 pairs, compared with 33,828,402 pairs in April and 34,059,534 pairs in the same month last year.

Pecora Is Held Choice to Head Phone Inquiry

Asked by Roosevelt to Be Chief Counsel, Says Reliable Report.

By the Associated Press.

Ferdinand Pecora was reported authoritatively yesterday to have been requested by President Roosevelt to become chief counsel for the Federal Communications Commission's investigation into the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Pecora, now on the New York Supreme Court bench, was President Roosevelt's dinner guest at the White House Wednesday night. He has been in conference with Senator La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive, and Felix Frankfurter, a chief of the Brain Trusters, since his arrival Sunday ostensibly to give counsel to his personal friend Thomas Corcoran, RFC attorney. Corcoran has been before the House Rules Committee for alleged lobbying activities for the Administration's utility holding company bill.

Faces Fall Elections.

Now serving on the New York court by appointment of Gov. Lehman, the lawyer who conducted the Senate's stock markets investigation comes up for election as Justice of the First New York Judicial District this fall. This district comprises largely the same section—Manhattan and the Bronx—where he was defeated for district attorney two years ago while running on the McKee-Farley recovery ticket.

Alex R. Rorke has been put forward as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Pecora's post in the October primaries. Rorke is reported to have a substantial following in Tammany Hall, which Pecora opposed when he ran for district attorney.

President Roosevelt was reported yesterday to be particularly anxious that a successful investigation be conducted into the A. T. & T. The inquiry was authorized last year by Congress in passing the Rayburn bill creating the Communications Commission. Efforts to obtain a counsel to conduct the investigation thus far have been unsuccessful.

Counsel Sought Vainly.

Commissioner Paul A. Walker, in charge of the inquiry as head of the telephone division of the commission, confirmed that difficulty had been encountered in finding a man.

As a justice on the New York supreme bench Pecora would serve a 14-year term if elected in the fall.

U.S. Cites Packers as Union Charges Infringements of Wagner Law.

By the Associated Press.

Milwaukee, July 11.—The Cudahy Brothers Co., packers, today was cited to the Federal Labor Board at Washington for "refusing to obey the law," paving the way to a possible test—one of the first—of the newly enacted Wagner labor relations act.

The citation was made by N. S. Clark, of the Regional Labor Board. It followed filing of a formal complaint by a meat cutters' union, charging failure of the company to grant the union rights guaranteed under the Wagner act, he said.

The complaint was made after George A. Billings, vice president of the company, notified officials of the union, an A. F. of L. affiliate, that it could not recognize the union as the sole bargaining agent for all employes. The union was named by a 595-to-270 vote of Cudahy workers to represent them in negotiations with the company.

Clark said he forwarded particulars in the case to Washington and proceedings probably will start before the regional board. The case then probably will be carried to the Circuit Court of Appeals, he said. Company officials would not comment on this possibility.

Union officials said they would not call a strike until it was definitely decided that the union "could not obtain its objectives granted under the law without a walkout."

Clark said the case would result in a test of the Wagner act and company officials expressed the same opinion.

The statute was enacted a few weeks ago with strong support of labor organizations.

Firemen Free Operator As G.A.O. Elevator Stalls

A short circuit in the elevator shaft of the old Pension Office building, which now houses the General Accounting Offices of the Government, brought out all downtown firemen, but their only duty was to free an aged operator from his stalled car.

The fire, extinguished by a building guard, caused the mechanism of the elevator to stall and William H. Hamilton, colored, 61, 224½ Twenty-second street northwest was trapped between the second and third floors.

He was extricated, uninjured, by the firemen after being imprisoned about 30 minutes. The damage did not exceed $50.

Senators Fight Plea to Outlaw Gold Loss Suits

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt's request for legislative outlawry of gold clause suits bumped into difficulties at both ends of the Capitol yesterday that foretold more trouble ahead.

Attorney General Cummings appeared before the Senate Banking Committee to smooth the way for the proposal. But he found himself surrounded by hostile Senators, including two former Secretaries of the Treasury—tall William G. McAdoo, of California, and short Carter Glass, of Virginia—both of whom suggested it would destroy Government credit.

Similar warnings were voiced before the House Banking Committee by Franklin W. Fort, former member of Congress and head of the Home Loan Bank Board under President Hoover. The House committee, however, planned to meet this morning in an effort to get the measure onto the floor during the day.

The resolution, recommended a few days ago by President Roosevelt in a special message, would close the courts to damage suits against the Government resulting from any losses sustained by gold-clause bond holders through dollar devaluation. It is designed to close the loopholes left by the Supreme Court in its famous gold decisions.

Cummings, before the Senate committee, sought to avoid arguing the merits of the proposal, but, confronted with cries of "repudiation," he contended the resolution was the "legitimate, inevitable, logical outcome" of the Government's monetary program and that therefore discussion of policy was "water over the dam."

Smiling at times to relieve the tension around the small committee table, Cummings expressed the view that devaluation had been "in the public interest" and necessary "to save the country from complete chaos."

Senator Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, said he had been one of the first advocates of dollar devaluation, but did not agree that closing the courts to damage suits was an "essential" of that policy.

"Do all lawyers agree that an essential of sovereignty is the right to repudiate?" Glass asked tartly.

His question went unanswered, as McAdoo asserted that no Government obligations were "of any value so long as the Government can repudiate at will." The Californian added that he was "concerned over the effect on the credit of the United States."

"No bond is binding on any government." Cummings replied. A moment later, when Senator Gore (Democrat), of Oklahoma, again used the word "repudiation," Cummings said:

"I don't call it repudiation, but that word doesn't hurt my feelings."

McAdoo contended the resolution "would be in violation of the gold decision." Glass added that "nothing was ever proposed more calculated to impair, if not destroy, the credit of the Government than this resolution."

Fort told the House Committee the resolution would "shake the credit of the United States as surely as we sit in this room today." He added that it was "the first step backward in the history of the United States toward re-assertion of the doctrine that the king can do no wrong."

Representative Wolcott (Republican), of Michigan, warned that the resolution would damage the market for Government bonds and said people already were beginning to fear an "artificial boom" from credit inflation.

Trade Council Entrusts Fate To Committee

Business Advisory Group Head Denies It Will Be Dissolved.

The future of the Business Advisory Council of the Commerce Department was placed in the hands of a committee yesterday with instructions to report in September.

Reports that the council was about to be disbanded were denied by H. P. Kendall, chairman, but it is possible that its future activities may be greatly changed or curtailed. Kendall said future activities would depend considerably on developments during the next two months.

Places left vacant by five recent resignations were not filled. Kendall's term as chairman of the organization has expired and a new chairman was to have been named yesterday, but no action was taken.

Complaints have been made that the White House and Department heads have paid little or no attention to the reports of the council. Some of these complaints were made by the members who have resigned, but it is known that there still is considerable dissatisfaction within the organization.

Members Still Interested.

In a formal statement following the meeting, Kendall said:

"About 30 members of the council were in attendance at today's meeting and there was every evidence of interest in the work this group of business men is doing. I am frank to say that reports that have gained some currency to the effect that the council is planning to cease its activities and disband are absolutely without foundation. Quite to the contrary, I feel that the council has never been in a better position to carry on the great work for which it was organized than at the present time.

"The program and planning committee appointed today will carry on its efforts during the balance of the summer and some time during September the members of the council will meet again to continue their efforts. One of the plans suggested for the future of the council was that the members be elected for a three-year period, with one third of the membership rotating yearly."

Committee Named.

Members whose resignations were accepted and whose places were not filled are Howard C. Smith, president of the Illinois Tools Works, Chicago; E. L. Ryerson, jr., president of J. T. Ryerson & Son, Inc., Chicago; Howard Heinz, president of the H. J. Heinz Co., Pittsburgh; Robert L. Lund, general manager of the Lambert Chemical Co., St. Louis, and James F. Bell, president of General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis.

Congress Wears Out Seventh Set of Flags

By the Associated Press.

The winds and rain which beat upon the United States Capitol have worn out seven sets of flags since this Congress convened.

Costly flags blow from four staffs over the Capitol. The flags over the east and west entrances fly night and day. Those over the Senate and House wings come down only when the houses adjourn.

"The life of a flag on one of those poles," Lieut. A. M. Jones, of the Capitol Guard, said today, "is less than 30 days."

These banners are the only flags in America which by right are permitted to fly after sundown. Even the flag on the White House comes down.

Limit Placed On Borrowing By Treasury

By the Associated Press.

Government intentions to maintain the easy money market were read by observers yesterday in Secretary Morgenthau's apparent determination to limit Treasury borrowing to a current need basis.

A press conference remark by the Treasury chief charted this course as President Roosevelt listed a series of conferences with financial experts at the White House. Among the callers were Morgenthau, George L. Harrison, governor of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and Irving Fisher, Yale University economist.

The subject of the presidential conferences was guarded carefully. Speculation stressed two possibilities: The international monetary situation and constantly recurring stabilization talk; the pending banking bill with its centralization of credit control.

Mr. Roosevelt has been giving special study to the Senate amendment to restore to banks a limited authority to underwrite security issues.

Despite extremely cheap money rates now prevailing on Government issues and an established borrowing program exceeding $4,000,000,000, Morgenthau told newsmen the Treasury's working cash balance probably would be maintained at a relatively low level from now on.

Financial observers interpreted his statement to mean the Treasury expected to obtain money cheaply for many months to come. Also there was a hint the Government was not sure of spending the full $8,000,000,000 projected in Mr. Roosevelt's budget message.

"The amount of borrowing," Morgenthau said, "will have a direct relation to the total amount of money we will need."

Morgenthau said that "most likely" the Treasury will offer $100,000,000 in 2¾ per cent bonds of 1955-60 on a highest bid basis Monday.

At present, the Treasury's cash balance is $1,215,000,000 but this includes $584,000,000 of gold profit, which is being used to retire national bank notes. The real working balance, therefore, is only $661,000,000. This will be increased, however, when proceeds from a recent $500,000,000 note issue are added.

Reduction of the balance has gone forward steadily for several weeks, but today's announcement was the most specific statement so far. Morgenthau said the balance should be between $750,000,000 and $1,000,000,000.

In earlier months of the New Deal the balance ran as high as $2,000,000,000. Large balances necessitated the deposit in banks of non-interest bearing bonds while the Government was paying out interest to lenders.

Curtail Power Of High Court, Lewis Advises

preme Court's assumption of the right to declare invalid congressional acts was "destructive both of justice and functions of government." He sharply assailed "irresponsible judges" and held that "minority government was the curse of America."

Assisted by Representative Fred Sisson (Democrat), of New York, Lewis urged that Congress enact a jurisdictional statute at once, specifying the authority of the Supreme Court over constitutional questions. Unless this is done, he declared, the New Deal can not go on, since its solutions for the depression have been thrown back into its face.

On the other hand, Raoul E. Desvernine, New York attorney and chairman of the national lawyers committee of the American Liberty League, contended that such proposals, if carried out, meant a change in this country's system of government and should not be undertaken without reference to the people.

"To impose the will of the majority in derogation of constitutionally reserved rights by legislative fiat or executive dictation," he declared, "is tantamount to establishing the omnipotent or totalitarian state possessed of unlimited power. This doctrine is clearly alien and foreign to our constitutional philosophy. It destroys our American system and substitutes the European system."

Desvernine asserted he would not undertake to debate the relative merits of these "totally different systems," but wanted to point out the meaning and implications of what was being proposed by the New Deal as an antidote for the recent Supreme Court decisions.

"If you want these things, be honest and frankly say, 'I want to change my government,'" he asserted.

Of greater importance than the opposition to the New Deal proposals, however, was the exposition of those proposals by Lewis, a leader in the House, one of the Roosevelt Administration's most ardent supporters, and one who has devoted over the year considerable research to the problems of judicial nullification of congressional legislation.

As a "remedy" for the Supreme Court's "assumption," as he contended, of the power to abrogate acts of Congress, Lewis proposed a "jurisdicitional statute" which would restrict the court in the exercise of this power in the following manner:

"Only a State should be heard to complain in the courts that an act of Congress invaded or impaired a power belonging exclusively to the States.

"Jurisdiction be denied to courts to nullify revenue acts of Congress.

"Jurisdiction be granted to review constitutionality of statutes violative of prohibitions as to specific subjects such as right of petition, habeas corpus, trial by jury, freedom of the press and about 20 others to be enumerated in the bill.

"Jurisdiction to be denied to annul statutes on such nonspecific titles as general welfare, life, liberty, property, as in the fifth amendment, except so far as they may deprive a person of a regular trial.

"That any decision of a court determining a United States statute to be void be subject to reversal by Congress."

These suggestions, he asserted, "fall clearly within the express provisions of the Constitution, I think, and are such as may be realized by act of Congress."

Lewis not only made the same argument as was projected yesterday by Sisson that the Supreme Court had usurped the power to pass on the constitutionality of acts of Congress, but he gave a lengthy recital to demonstrate his point.

Likewise he went into some detail to show that the framers of the Constitution intended in the "general welfare" clause to give Congress a grant of power and did not intend that phrase, as so often is contended, as a limitation on the taxation power. He cited the story of a comma being substituted unintentionally for a semicolon in the final draft of the Constitution and thus changing the meaning of that phase.

Desvernine, however, subsequently challenged the Marylander's contention that the "general welfare" clause was anything but a limitation on the taxation power.

Comma or Semicolon.

But Lewis held that with comma or with semicolon the clause "was intended as a grant of power, and that under it Congress may provide for the 'general welfare,' not merely through the levying of a tax, but by other logical and legitimate means, such as the prescription of justiciable rights and duties generally."

Should the Lewis interpretation of the clause be generally accepted there would be no doubt of the constitutionality of the Guffey-Snyder coal stabilization bill and other measures which he and others regard as of doubtful validity in the face of recent Supreme Court decisions.

Indeed, Lewis contended that the coal bill itself projects the issue facing the country, because, he said, if that measure is not passed 450,000 miners will go on strike, while if it is adopted, he added, "the Federal judges will go on strike," in its enforcement.

Turning back to the Constitution and the Supreme Court, Lewis contended that if that document "fails us in our generation, it fails only because it has suffered by these interpolated unwritten amendments," which he contended the Supreme Court has followed.

"The first one," he asserted, "which adds to the expressed judicial powers a jurisdiction to invalidate congressional acts, is a power to prorogue Congress so far as our present problems are concerned.

"The second one perverts the life, liberty and property clause to provide that all new laws relating to life, liberty or property must conform to the opinions of the judges as to right and wrong, the opinion of Congress as to right and wrong to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Sterilizes" Powers.

"The effect of this unwritten amendment is to crystallize the pre-existing laws as to personal and property rules, whether right or wrong, and to sterilize all legislative power for the advancement of legal justice or adaptation of the laws to even profound changes in industrial and social conditions."

He contended that the suppression of the congressional power to act under the "general welfare" clause constituted "an abrogation of an expressed power" and created "a vacuum where neither the State nor the Federal Government may act—a vacuum in which the country has already once fallen only to pay the terrible price of a civil war."

Explaining his proposals for restoration of what he regarded as the intentions of the framers of the Constitution in the relationship between Congress and the Supreme Court, Lewis contended that such general titles as "life, liberty and property describe nothing in particular, with specificity of subject utterly lacking."

"The only office a judge discharges in declaring a child labor law, a minimum wage or a minimum hour law as in violation of the rights of life, liberty or property," he continued, "is to assume that he has a better understanding of social justice and wise legislation in respect thereto than the Congress selected by the people to act on these subjects."

Desvernine, presenting the other side of the question, pointed out that the adequacy of the Constitution was challenged by the President in his so-called "horse and buggy" press conference and that suggestions which have come from other New Dealers can not be idly dismissed "without serious apprehension."

Charges "Political Expedient."

He pointed out proposals in Congress "not only to make the Federal Government omnipotent in all social and economic fields of action, but also to curb the Supreme Court in its power to declare laws unconstitutional."

"Some advocate," he went on, "as a possible political expedient, the passing of laws of doubtful constitutionality to stir up an irresistible public demand for the amendment of the Constitution. This suggestion assumes that the Constitution must be amended to carry out new 'theories' which the public will not support unless further agitated."

He denied the Constitution was "strait-jacketed to the horse and buggy age," and said it frequently had demonstrated "its flexibility and adaptability." None, he said, would challenge the right of amendment in orderly procedure, but such amendments, he asserted, should be scrutinized to determine whether they were dedicated to adapting the Government to new and unforeseen conditions or whether to establishing a new and different form of government.

He reviewed the formation of the American governmental system of checks and balances—a Federal Government of limited, not general jurisdiction, and "a Government of laws, not man." Just because the Federal Government is restricted in its action, he asserted, it "in no way shows that our Government is impotent to take action."

Far Transcend Needs.

"It merely shows that the Federal Government is not the proper branch of the Government unless it is also shown that the State or local governments are equally unable to take action," he asserted.

Referring to recent proposals to transfer sovereign power from the States to the Federal Government, which, he asserted, "far transcend present needs," Desvernine contended that to go to such an extreme "is nothing more than a proposal to change our system of government, not to adapt our present system to existing conditions.

"Our courts have so wisely and adequately met each situation when it has arisen," he asserted, "that it would seem wisdom to continue to entrust them with the working out of this problem, rather than to impulsively set up a new form of government under such highly emotionalized and volatile conditions as at present."

He criticized the Administration for seeking to evade judicial review of the legislation "by preventing and postponing the adjudication of constitutional issues," which he said had been costly to business and "has not encouraged respect for law."

Wife of Waley Goes on Stand In Kidnap Trial

First Witness for Defense as Prosecution Closes Weyerhaeuser Story.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., July 11.—Nineteen-year-old Mrs. Margaret Waley became her own first defense witness late today after Federal Judge E. E. Cushman had denied motions for dismissal of a kidnap charge and a directed verdict of acquittal on a charge of conspiracy in the kidnaping of 9-year-old George Weyerhaeuser.

Her counsel made no opening statement and said they hoped to rest their case today with Mrs. Waley's husband, Harmon, 24, as the next witness. Two others, their names withheld, may be called, John F. Dore, attorney, said.

Mrs. Waley began answering preliminary and identification questions.

In denying Dore's motion Judge Cushman commented that the common law, shielding wife from the law when she was under the influence of her husband, should not be applied to "a heinous crime such as this is."

United States Attorney J. Charles Dennis had argued that all Mrs. Waley's statements to officers, plus George Weyerhaeuser's testimony today, corroborated the Government allegation he was taken in interstate commerce, in violation of the Lindbergh law, into the Idaho Panhandle.

George Weyerhaeuser told of being chained in pits and tied to a tree during the week he was in the hands of kidnapers as he took the role of star Government witness earlier in the day.

But he testified he had not seen the blonde defendant during his period of captivity before his wealthy father ransomed him for $200,000.

Between glances at the 19-year-old accused woman who thrice tried to plead guilty but was prevented from so doing by her attorneys, the 9-year-old timber fortune heir identified a photograph of the fugitive, William Mahan, as the man who seized him and took him "to a hole."

He identified pictures of two pits in which he had been chained.

"That's Harmon," he said when shown a photograph of Harmon M. Waley, husband of the woman on the stand.

Waley, who recently pleaded guilty to kidnaping charges and was sentenced to 45 years in prison, was nearby, having been brought from McNeil Island Federal Penitentiary to testify in behalf of his wife.

Little George faced his abductor and the accused woman without any outward show of excitement.

He was summoned to the stand by United States Attorney J. Charles Dennis with a single word —"George."

The regular oath was administered. He raised his hand and answered it with a smile, two little nods of the head and low but clear, "Yes."

At first the curly-haired youngster averted his gaze when Mrs. Waley entered the courtroom and glanced at him.

The accused girl was flushed and smiling after a brief reunion with her husband under the eyes of Federal officers.

Thereafter the little heir shot quick glances at Mrs. Waley, but she appeared unaware of them.

Quickly George gave his name, address, parents' names and the name of the school which he had left at noon a few minutes before being abducted.

The United States attorney brought out that just before being seized, George reached a tennis court not far from the school.

"Then what happened, George?" asked Dennis.

The boy hesitated.

"Did you meet a man there?"

"No."

"Well," said Dennis, picking up a photograph. George glanced at it and said it was "Mahan."

Then he identified the photograph of Waley.

George said he did not know whether Waley was in the automobile with Mahan when the latter seized him.

"Where did you go after leaving the tennis court, do you know?" Dennis asked.

"Yes; to a hole."

Then came the pictures of the holes.

"What did they do with you there?" the prosecutor continued. "I see some chains there. What did they do with you?"

"Fastened me," said George, keeping his eyes on Dennis.

"Did you sign your name to a letter that night?"

"No; I did that before I came into the hole."

The little witness identified a picture of a rock he had seen "just before we came to the second hole."

Several questions were necessary to bring out that he had been taken to the second hole on the second night of his captivity.

Parolee Seized For $465,000 Extortion Plot

Towt, of South Nyack, N. Y., who is still missing—$75,000.

Hoover termed the arrest a "red letter case" and declared Wagner was "a particularly vicious type of criminal preying upon the families of persons who have disappeared."

It was in connection with the Towt case that Wagner was finally trapped, Hoover said, though Federal men had long since concluded that the mysterious letters which appeared in the wake of every noted kidnaping case were from the same source.

Monroe Towt, son of the missing man, received a letter on July 7 demanding immediate payment of $75,000. The letter gave instructions for payment of the money and agents made an appointment to meet the writer.

Wagner was captured July 10 in the scene of the proposed rendezvous, an abandoned factory building in Debevoise street, Brooklyn.

Hoover said Wagner has a criminal record and was paroled from Sing Sing Prison in May, 1934. He is the father of several children and has been on the emergency relief rolls for some time.

Hoover said Wagner was arrested in Brooklyn in 1911 on a charge of juvenile delinquency in connection with a robbery. He received a suspended sentence. He was arrested six years later in Brooklyn for unlawful entry and was put on probation. In 1927 he was convicted of first degree robbery and sentenced to serve terms of 5 to 15 years to run consecutively. He went to Sing Sing and was paroled after serving seven and a half years.

At this point Hoover interrupted his story to remark again on what he called the perils of paroling men from prison.

The chief of the G-Men compared the case to that of Peter Smidunk, arrested recently in Bridgeport, Conn., and in whose possession the authorities found a card index of prospective extortion victims.

Wagner, Hoover said, was being held tonight in the offices of the Department of Justice in New York.

Mother-in-Law Grilled, Denies Swamp Murder

Police Seek Explanation of Rope, Towel, in 'Torture Slaying.'

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 11.—After nearly a day of grilling, Mrs. Blanche Dunkel, mother-in-law of Ervin Lang, "swamp slaying" victim, police announced tonight they were near a denouement in the gruesome mystery.

While the 42-year-old grandmother maintained she knew nothing of the "torture murder," Police Capt. Patrick O'Connell, who had ordered her moved from the Passavant Hospital to town hall station, said:

"We're on the verge of a solution of this brutal case."

At the same time, police evinced new interest in the death of Mrs. Mallie Lang, daughter of Mrs. Dunkel and wife of the slain man. She died last December supposedly of heart disease.

Lang's body was found in a swamp near Hammond, Ind., Tuesday. The skull was crushed, both legs were cut off, and a rope was tied tightly around the neck.

Police questioners sought Mrs. Dunkel's story on why, they said, rope similar to that used in the garroting was found in her home, and why a towel wrapped around the left leg stump of the victim matched one found in her home.

At the hospital where Mrs. Dunkel was employed and where she had been a tonsillectomy patient until today, she had denied making threats against her son-in-law if he continued his attentions to a young woman and said:

"Ervin was just like my own boy. We never had any quarrels and got along fine."

Police were curious to learn also what Mrs. Dunkel did with $100 she drew from a safety deposit box she rented jointly with the victim, who continued to reside at her home after his wife's death.

Held by police for questioning were George Anderson, a nephew of Mrs. Dunkel; Mrs. Olive Knudsen, 30, her niece; Harold Lundell, 32, called by police a friend of Mrs. Knudsen, and Albert Atkins, 34, a roomer at Mrs. Dunkel's house.

They were taken in custody when Miss Josephine McKinley, Lang's fiancee, said she and Lang had been trailed by a car bearing numbers issued to Anderson.

Test Results Awaited By 77 Haircurlers

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, July 11.—Seventy-seven persons in Maryland still are awaiting official approval of their ability to curl hair—or to uncurl it.

Thirty-five of them gave written proof and a practical demonstration that they could put curls in; 42 of them, all colored, gave similar proof that they could take them out.

It all came about yesterday at the first examination for licenses held by Maryland's new board of hair dressers and beauty culturists.

All the applicants did very well, said Miss Marie L. Montgomery, chairman of the examining board, but the grading of examination papers hasn't yet been completed.

Lehman Warns Sightseers Out Of Flood Area

Threatens to Block Roads Against Curious; Plans Relief Measures.

By the United Press.

Elmira, N. Y., July 11.—Gov. Herbert N. Lehman, surveying flood-ridden southern New York, where more than two score persons lost their lives, threatened to block all roads leading to the stricken areas to bar sightseers who have hampered relief work.

Aroused by the influx of sightseers and curiosity seekers, the Governor exclaimed:

"If the sightseers don't keep out of the stricken areas all roads will be blocked. My intention would be to use State and other police. I said 'if.'" He emphasized the word "if."

Gov. Lehman, accompanied by leaders in the relief work, set up temporary over-night headquarters here late this afternoon after completing the first leg of his journey through the devastated area.

Visits Wrecked Towns.

Leaving Albany shortly after dawn by automobile, Gov. Lehman traveled through many communities that felt the full fury of the storm.

"Gee, it's terrible," he said at Binghamton, where he paused to confer with officials directing relief work in that area. "It's pathetic."

He urged groups of flood victims to "keep up your courage," and promised that none would "go hungry or lack shelter."

The Governor and his party, including Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., State commissioner of health, viewed smashed homes, broken automobiles and barren fields—literally swept away by swirling streams, fed by torrential rains.

In many areas the once beautiful countryside was streaked with mud. Many summer cottages along the Susquehanna and Chenango rivers lay broken.

Lehman, his face serious, went through one of the battered homes. He went from top to bottom of the once cozy house. Emerging, he remarked:

"This is unbelievable."

Typhoid Injections Given.

Immediately after setting up headquarters in a hotel, the Governor went into conference with Robert E. Bondy, national director of disaster relief, to plan renewed relief work.

He was especially interested in the health measure being advanced to prevent a possible outbreak of typhoid fever.

Parran described sanitary conditions as "very serious." Victims throughout the area were receiving typhoid antitoxin injections.

The Governor plans to resume his survey tomorrow. He will travel through Hornell, Watkins Glen and other villages which were caught in the avalanche of water that swept bridges, houses, crops and highways from its path.

Thousands Die As Floods Race Through China

Yangtze Bursts Dikes Near Nanking, Inundating Vast Green Countryside.

By the Associated Press.

Hankow, China, July 11.—The ceaselessly battering torrents of the Yangtze River crushed important dikes near Nanking today, converting many square miles of green countryside into one vast lake, as unconfirmed reports from western Honan Province said 2,000 to 3,000 persons perished in floods there.

C. L. Sharp, of Fort Worth, Tex., air-mail pilot arriving here from Shanghai, reported the flooded Yangtze was roaring through two new gaps in the dike 200 miles east of Hankow and inundating extensive low-lying farm lands

Bodies Litter Debris.

The reports from Honan said the Lo River rose 20 feet after torrential rains, littering the landscape with human bodies and wrecking the once prosperous town of Yenshih Hsien, 20 miles east of Honanfu.

In Hupeh Province the swollen Han River spread out still farther and the important City of Laohokow was reported virtually submerged. Ten thousand persons there were said to be homeless, with 3,000 houses destroyed.

While the yellow Yangtze tumbled on toward the sea, advices from Nanking quoted Chief Engineer Sun Shih-Fu, of the conservancy commission, as expressing the opinion the present calamity would get no worse provided no more rain fell and westerly winds continued.

A vivid impression of the immense scope of the great river's overflow west of Hankow was brought here by the young marshal, Chang Hsueh-Liang, and members of his entourage who surveyed the stricken territory for 500 miles in Chang's luxurious new American airliner.

Vast Area Inundated.

They said water was pouring through a 100-yard breach in the dike near Shasi, 250 miles west of here, forming a sheet of water 75 miles long and covering an area of at least 1,200 square miles.

All this territory lying between the north bank of the Yangtze and foothills to the north was a few weeks ago a region growing crops on which an immense population depended for its livelihood.

The air travelers reported the newly-formed inland sea was dotted with thousands of small islands, farmers, many of which collapsed marking the homes of impoverished at the flood's touch. Only roofs were showing in some cases and farm families were clustered there awaiting the infrequent rescue boats.

Bodies of farm animals and even human corpses were said to be floating amid the debris cluttering the flood waters, while those who escaped drowning were clinging by thousands to dikes and the few other spots still above water.

Grayson Calls Red Cross To New York Flood Aid

By the United Press.

Red Cross Chairman Cary T. Grayson last night called on New York State chapters of the organization to join in raising a $350,000 fund to aid families who suffered in the floods.

"These families are without resources to reestablish themselves," Grayson said. "They are therefore a Red Cross responsibility.

"The fund is required immediately. All those who wish to help may give their contributions to the chapters in their local communities or send them to national headquarters in Washington."

Grayson said the national organization would start the fund with a contribution of $25,000.

In presenting the painting, Ambassador Lindsay said:

Mr. Roosevelt announced it would be hung in the National Gallery here.

U. S. Mustering Crime Forces For Big Drive

Co-ordinated Agencies Will Fight All Post-Repeal Racketeers.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Government yesterday began mustering its law enforcement agencies for a drive on "big time" post-repeal racketeers whose interstate operations thwart local police.

Evidence has been gathered of a widespread transfer of prohibition-developed bootleggers into a field said by Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General in charge of criminal prosecutions, to be heretofore generally occupied by hardened professional criminals.

Rackets listed yestedray by Justice and Treasury Department officials as being worked by dry era bootleggers include bank robbing, kidnaping, extortion, blackmailing, labor and employer "protective societies;" narcotic peddling, alien smuggling (particularly Chinese women); counterfeiting of currency, liquor tax stamps and labels; white slavery, hijacking of trucks on the highways, "numbers" games, faked stock and bond deals, and automobile thefts.

Keenan said that under the American Government structure, the field of law enforcement on which Federal agencies were forced to concentrate was that of crimes of interstate character.

Local rackets, he said, should be handled by local authorities, although Federal agencies sought to co-operate with them.

"Of course, those who are moving into post-repeal rackets are the same type of alley rats who attempted to control the illicit liquor business," Keenan said. "While many bootleggers during prohibition were drawn from legitimate work by the opportunity for quick and big profits, they are now unwilling to work. They demand lives of ease and luxury and devote their living to preying upon the public."

Keenan said many appeals have come to the department from local organizations to take over local crime control in several cities, but emphasized that the Federal Government could not assume that responsibility.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation, is directly in charge of the Justice Department's anti-crime drive, while the six small enforcing agencies of the Treasury are being co-ordinated by a crime committee headed by Harold Graves, assistant to Secretary Morgenthau.

Heads of the Secret Service, Coast Guard, Customs and Narcotics bureaus, the Alcohol Tax Division and the Alcohol Intelligence Unit are meeting weekly with Graves to unify their efforts for crime control and revenue protection.

In addition, they are working with the immigration service of the Labor Department in the alien smuggling fight.

Townsend Pension Move Transfers Base Here

National headquarters of the Townsend old-age pension movement have been transferred from Los Angeles to Washington, it was announced yesterday. This action was taken preparatory to an organization drive in every congressional district, R. E. Clements, co-founder of the movement, said.

"The moving of our headquarters here," Mr. Clements said, "was made necessary by the growth of sentiment in the East and Midwest. The movement will reach into every district and be firmly established before members of Congress return for the next session."

Interior Strike Arbiters Make Little Headway

Labor Department Aids Seeking to Settle Walkout by 350.

Little progress was believed made yesterday by Labor Department conciliators who sought to arbitrate a strike of 350 building trades workers at the Interior Department Building.

The Washington Building Trades Council called out the electricians, plumbers, plasterers and others Monday in protest against employment of 40 non-union men to change the building's electric current from direct to alternating.

Department clerks were distressed by the strike, which delayed work on a $1,000,000 air-cooling system and on construction of additional elevators.

John Locher, building trades executive secretary, warned the strikers would not return to work as long as non-union men were employed in the same building.

Interior Department officials explained the contract which resulted in the hiring of the non-union men was awarded to the Industrial Power Equipment Co., Baltimore, because it was the low bidder.

Howard T. Colvin, commissioner of the Labor Department Conciliation Service and John L. Nagle, National Park Service engineer, were active in the negotiations between those involved.

Prince Georges Bans Gambling At Social Fetes

Prosecutor Bowie Gives Warning; Firemen of County Protest.

Emulating his colleague in Montgomery County, State's Attorney Alan Bowie, of Prince Georges County, yesterday let it be known that police are not going to tolerate games of chance at benefit affairs.

So Prince Georges County, where the ivory ball clicked in the roulette wheel at Jimmy LaFontaine's for so many years, is putting the ban on carnival paddle wheels and claw machines.

Loud were the protests from various companies of the county's volunteer firemen, practically all of which operate games which straddle that dim line between gaming and sport at their annual carnivals.

Prosecutor Bowie's sweeping order will be felt in staid Takoma Park, where the Church of Our Lady of Sorrows was planning to use the Prince Georges part of the church property for those features of their carnival deemed illegal in Montgomery.

Bingo Parties Questioned.

Although Mr. Bowie would not discuss the effect of his order on bingo parties given by churches, it was understood that many of these he may consider illegal.

At Rockville yesterday, State's Attorney James H. Pugh indicated that he does not contemplate calling off his antigaming drive because of pleas from churches and firemen.

Mr. Pugh said:

"There have been numerous requests to the State's Attorney's office for an interpretation of the orders issued by the chief of police and myself in reference to gambling.

"It is unfortunate that this order became necessary at a time when the churches and volunteer fire companies are preparing for their annual affairs, but the fact that the law, enacted in 1924, has not been strictly enforced, is no fault of mine.

"The law is in force and it is my duty as State's Attorney to do everything in my power to enforce it, and this I intend to do to the best of my ability. The chief of police has been given the order and there can be no discrimination."

Mr. Pugh went on to say that the legislature was the proper place to apply for relief from the law.

Ball Machine Discussed.

About the so-called "pin" or "ball" machines, the State's Attorney said that they were legal as long as played for pleasure, but were subject to destruction as gaming devices if the players gamble among themselves or if prizes are offered.

Mr. Bowie in turn said that he had ordered the county police to notify all establishments operating claw machines to get rid of them at once or they will be seized.

His order against gaming included a request for the arrest of any one "playing any game of chance where money may be won or lost." Such is violation of the law, the State's attorney said.

Firemen in the county pointed out that the order will mean the finish of one of their main sources of revenue. C. Earl Wyvill, president of the County Firemen's Association, said that 90 per cent conduct carnivals each year.

These carnivals, Wyvill said, furnish much of the companies' revenue. Games of chance are also sponsored at the association's annual tournament, he said.

Problem Left Unanswered.

"There was some discussion among individual firemen after the association meeting Wednesday night at Mount Rainier. The question of what we would do if we are not allowed the games, was brought up, but no one proposed an answer," Wyvill declared.

Asked if the association would fight the case in court if any of their members were arrested on such a charge, Wyvill said he doubted it. He pointed out that it would be a matter for each company.

There are no carnivals in progress now. The next one scheduled will be held at Glenn Dale, Md., July 20. Wyvill said this company usually held the games, but he could not predict what they would do in view of recent circumstances.

Commons Told Italy's Ethiopia Aim Unjustified

colonies are completely devoid of foundation."

At the risk of criticism, Sir Samuel told the legislators, Britain has made proposals designed to avert an Italo-Ethiopian war which, no matter how it ended, would inevitably affect the League of Nations and perhaps bring about reappearance of the old system of alliances, with its consequent disquiet and intrigue.

He reaffirmed this nation's faith in the league and emphasized that the government was seeking to avert an Italo-Ethiopian crisis "at almost any cost."

Sir Samuel's references to continued good relations with the United States included denial of reports that offers of co-operation from Washington had been refused. "We have refused no offers, for no offers have been made us," he said. "I need hardly add that if offers of co-operation are made us they will always find a friendly welcome."

Referring many times to the necessity for "realism" in diplomacy, the foreign secretary called upon other nations to face world problems frankly.

Hitler Can Serve Himself.

"It is now in the power of the German chancellor," he said, to make—and make easily—a real contribution to the cause of peace, a contribution which will remove a cause of anxiety from the minds of many governments, not only in central and eastern Europe, but in western Europe as well.

"I would urge him to make it; I think, indeed, that he will be serving his own cause by making it.

Britain and the world in general had been disturbed, Sir Samuel said, "not only by Germany's program of rearmament, but also by certain other phenomena in modern Germany."

Nevertheless, he added, Britain proceeded with the recently signed Anglo-German naval pact, feeling it was an important step forward toward peace. Too many disarmament opportunities have slipped away in the last 15 years, he said, and Britain seized an opportunity of eliminating naval competition, one of the chief causes of pre-war bitterness between the two nations.

'Naval Pact Profitable.'

"The British government has no apologies for this practical all-around contribution to peace," the foreign secretary said in expressing the opinion that the naval agreement was unselfish, beneficial mutually, profitable "in both places to the taxpayer" and manifestly advantageous to other powers, including France, its sharpest critic.

Pointing out that the limitations on Germany's navy give France 43 per cent superiority over Germany as against 30 per cent inferiority before the war, he pleaded for French toleration, saying:

"We are both wrong to question a friendship in which no wedges can be driven save by our own two selves."

Labor Approves Rail Pension Bill

21 Bodies Back Measure; Believed Court-Proof.

By the Associated Press.

Spokesmen for 21 railway labor organizations appeared before a Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee yesterday to indorse a railroad employes' retirement act designed to replace the one killed recently by the Supreme Court.

"The bill has the unanimous indorsement of the members of the railroad labor executives committee and of the organizations," asserted Timothy Shea, assistant president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers.

Edwin A. Krauthoff, counsel for the legislative committee of the Labor Executives Association, which represents the 21 railway employes' organizations, said the bill is not based on the Interstate Commerce clause of the Constitution, which the Supreme Court held was not broad enough to permit compulsory retirement insurance for railroad workers. He contended the bill is constitutional because it relies on the power of Congress to levy taxes and appropriate money. The measure would provide $50,000,000 to pay retirement annuities.

British, French Envoys, Hull Discuss Crisis

Italian Ambassador Also Tells State Department About Ethiopia.

eral subjects during his conference with Hull.

While Hull would make no comment on any possible developments affecting the United States, observers said that the American note to Emperor Haile Selassie answering his plea for invocation of the Kellogg-Briand pact had not closed the door on American cooperation in efforts to settle the Ethiopian trouble.

Meanwhile, Senator Pope (Democrat), Idaho, said in a radio speech that with Mussolini "apparently entered upon a course of subjugating Ethiopia by force with utter disregard of his solemn obligation," the United States must not stand idly by and do nothing.

"The United States can not wash her hands of the affair and I am certain this Government does not intend to do so," Pope said.

"I am thoroughly convince' that Mussolini intends, upon one pretext or another, to make war upon Ethiopia, and all who believe in justice and peace should support our Government in the policy of co-operating, short of war, with any measures the league feels itself justified in taking to deal with the situation."

Giving reasons why he said "Mussolini is so determined to crush little Ethiopia," he said:

"First—He is determined to build an empire. As one Italian senator puts it, 'It is the manifest destiny of Italy to possess Ethiopia.' Manifest destiny! What crimes have been committed under that high sounding phrase. What it really means is oil, coal deposits, iron, sulphur, copper, platinum and gold.

"Second—Italy wants to build a railroad through Ethiopia to connect her two east African colonies—the Eritrea and Italian Somaliland. So Ethiopia must be subjugated by military force to give Italy a railroad.

"Third—It seems to be a part of the Fascist philosophy that war makes for the virility of Italian manhood; it puts iron into their blood, to feed them occasionally 'the raw meat of nationalistic pride.'"

Pope said the United States had not refused to act and that he was convinced it was the purpose of the Government to "consult and cooperate with other nations" under the Kellogg peace pact and the League of Nations.

Sister Asks Clemency For Prison Rioter

Harrisburg, Pa., July 11 (AP).—Mrs. Ann Doran, of Chicago, asked the pardon board today to reduce the 60-year sentence of her brother, Michael D. Norton, who took part in the 1924 Western Penitentiary disorders in which two guards were shot.

Attorney General Charles J. Margiotti told Mrs. Doran that Norton's record "is worse than Dillinger had." Norton was sentenced in 1921 to from 16 to 19 years for robbery and receiving stolen goods. His sentence was extended after the riot.

New York, July 11 (U.P.).—Ralph Scaberio, 19, relief recipient charged with stealing an automobile, today told a magistrate he intended buying the car and was only testing it. "What kind of a car was it?" the magistrate asked. "Packard," was the reply.

Pearson Held Ready to Quit Island Post

Resignation of Judge Also Hinted as President Enters Inquiry.

was sponsored by Senator Harrison and he has the support of Postmaster General Farley and of Senator Robinson. Thus Ickes finds himself aligned in a bitter squabble against some of the strongest leaders in the Democratic Party.

Removal Demanded.

Ickes recently demanded that Judge Wilson be removed for judicial misconduct. Wilson can be summarily removed by Cummings. The Attorney General said yesterday that "I think I ought not to comment on the situation."

Ickes attacked Tydings for his refusal to permit an Interior Department representative to cross-examine witnesses. Tydings replied by advising Ickes to get himself elected to the Senate if he wanted to run its affairs.

Asked yesterday if he had replied to the Tydings letter, Ickes said, "I haven't read my mail today." In answer to a question of whether he had arranged to "smoke a pipe of peace" with Tydings, he said:

"I haven't smoked a pipe for about 20 years."

Ickes said he had not heard the report that Pearson and Wilson would resign, declaring that "rumors do not penetrate into my office." Asked about the possibility of his own resignation, he said:

"I kind of like my job. It keeps me interested."

Ickes said he had not changed his opinion about Judge Wilson and that he still believed he should be removed.

Discussing a report complaining of Pearson's administration of the islands, made while Herbert Hoover was President, Ickes replied that it was made by the "delectable" Herbert T. Brown.

"He was a buddy of Reed Smoot," Ickes said. "There was once a Senator named Smoot, wasn't there?"

Wanted to Be Governor.

"One of the first men who came in here after I took office," Ickes said, "was Mr. Brown. He wanted to be Governor of the Virgin Islands."

Judge Wilson, who is a former Representative from Mississippi, conferred at length during the afternoon with Senator Harrison. Wilson had been one of the principal witnesses against Pearson. Neither Wilson nor Pearson would discuss the reports that they would resign.

Another Skirmish.

Between visits to the White House, Ickes engaged in another skirmish. He appeared before the Senate Public Land Committee in behalf of the measure to change the Interior Department to the Department of Conservation and Public Works. He said the bill is opposed by a "powerful lobby," active in the Forest Service.

F. A. Silcox, chief of the Forest Service, replied that the bill constituted a "popular fallacy" and that it would lead to conflict in administration. The bill would permit the President to transfer all conservation work to the new department.

House Enacts Changes in TVA; Coup for Death Clause Mapped

committee will meet for the first time today.

Dr. Ernest H. Gruening, Interior Department official, backed up Corcoran's earlier testimony before the House Rules Committee, that Brewster had offered to "duck" the House vote on the "death sentence." Elaborations on the Corcoran-Brewster episode were presented by half a dozen witnesses.

Representative Samuel B. Pettengill (Democrat), Indiana, wrote Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, charging a "mistatement of fact" by Kennedy in his letter to Senator Burton K. Wheeler opposing the House version of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. Pettengill denied the phrase "public interest" was not defined in the House bill.

Rayburn to Ask for Six.

Chairman Sam Rayburn, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, planned to ask for House appointment of conferees on the Wheeler-Rayburn bill yesterday, but a last-minute parliamentary wrangle forced that issue over until today.

Normally, the House designates five ranking members of a committee handling a bill as its conferees in final negotiations with the Senate. It was said that Rayburn plans to ask for appointment of six conferees, instead of five.

This would have the effect of equally dividing the House conference committee on the "death sentence" issue, three and three, although the House decisively rejected the "death sentence" by a 70-vote margin.

Proposed conference in favor of holding company dissolutions, it was said, would compise Representatives Rayburn, Leas of California and Crosser of Ohio, all Democrats.

Conferees aligned against the "death sentence" would be Representatives Huddleston (Democrat), of Alabama; Cooper, of Ohio, and Holmes, of Massachusetts, Republicans, if present plans are carried into execution.

Extremely Unusual.

Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, assistant House Republican leader, said last night he was informed that this was the arrangement. He said it was "extremely unusual procedure."

The report increased speculation on a probable conference "compromise" satisfactory to the Administration. Chairman Wheeler, of the Senate conferees, said he was prepared to concede, if necessary, that only holding companies two or more degrees removed from operating subsidiaries, be dissolved. The Senate bill had ordained the "death sentence" for all holding companies more than one degree removed.

Following yesterday's House Rules Committee lobbying conference, Chairman O'Connor said hearings probably will be resumed on Tuesday. He said Brewster had indicated a desire to testify in rebuttal. Brewster may place on the stand his two secretaries, who had telephone conversations with Corcoran on the day of the House utilities bill vote. The committee then plans to conclude that phase of its inquiry, and make a preliminary report to the House.

House Records Eyed.

O'Connor said the committee not only plans to solicit each member of Congress by letter for any knowledge they may have of utility lobbyists or lobbying, but may search the House records for lobbying charges made from the House floor. He mentioned the names of Representative Rankin, of Mississippi; Representative McFarlane, of Texas, and Representative Hoeppel, of California, as having made such charges.

Broadening of the House power lobby hunt will begin at once, O'Connor intimated. He said so-called power "propaganda" was discussed at length at yesterday's meeting.

"It is a recognized fact that propaganda was distributed," O'Connor told reporters. "We want to find out what it was, where it went and how much it cost."

Senator Black said the Senate's own broad investigation of all lobbying will get under way in a few days. He said the committee will determine today how far it will go, but his own plan is to open with a thorough inquiry into the power lobby. Under the Senate resolution, he has the authority to call on Government departments for expert aid.

Leadership Regains Saddle.

Each of the two committees has $50,000 at its disposal.

House passage of the Administration's TVA amendments yesterday was a close sequel to action Wednesday writing into the bill virtually all of the amendments sought by the Roosevelt forces. It placed the leadership again in the saddle from which it was jostled last week when the House bolted the President on the holding-company "death sentence."

The bill now goes to conference with the Senate, which adopted even a stronger measure from the Administration's viewpoint. In effect, the bill validates TVA Authority to sell surplus power, held up under a ruling by Federal Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, Ala.

Liberalizing amendments accepted permit below-cost sale of power and chemicals, modify the Comptroller General's grip on the TVA pocketbook, permit duplication of transmission lines, and require TVA approval of Tennessee River dam construction.

Corcoran Threat Denied.

Testifying at House Rules Committee hearings on the Corcoran-Brewster incident yesterday, Dr. Gruening, a friend of both men, denied Corcoran had "threatened" Brewster if he did not vote for the "death sentence." Brewster had charged that Corcoran, in the presence of Gruening, had told him he would stop work on the Passamaquoddy tide-harnessing project in Maine, unless Brewster voted for the "death sentence."

Gruening told of efforts by himself and Corcoran to reach Brewster on the day of the vote. The Interior Department official said the Maine Representative had told him he intended not to be present during the "death sentence" vote. A similar charge by Corcoran on Tuesday drew from Brewster the heated rejoinder, "You are a liar."

"Don't run out like that," Gruening said he told Brewster. "You'll be making a terrible mistake if you don't vote."

Earlier that day, Gruening said, Corcoran had phoned him he thought Brewster was "a double dealer" and "about to run out on us."

Denies Thumbing Nose.

Corcoran himself was put on the stand briefly yesterday. Representative Frederick R. Lehlbach (Republican), New Jersey, asked if the RFC attorney, after talking with Brewster just before the "death sentence" vote, had not talked to several members in the House corridor opposite the Speakers' lobby.

"Didn't you thumb your nose at a member who was going to vote against the 'death sentence?'" Lehlbach asked.

"No," replied Corcoran.

Representative John G. Cooper (Republican), of Ohio, took the stand to say he had seen Corcoran and two other men in the House Speakers' lobby putting up a poster.

Senator White Heard.

Senator Wallace H. White (Republican), of Maine, whose name had figured in prior testimony by both Brewster and Corcoran, said he was "sensitive" about these references, and appeared before the committee to explain his position.

Corcoran had testified Brewster offered to intercede with White (who he said was under "political obligations" to him) in behalf of the "death sentence."

White told the committee that Brewster had phoned him once, before the Senate voted on the utilities bill, representing that he was speaking for Corcoran, and saying it would be disappointing to Corcoran if he failed to vote for the death sentence.

White said Brewster had asked him if he could refrain from voting, and he replied that he "could not run away from a vote of such importance."

The Maine Senator said he not only voted against the "death sentence," but spoke against it, voted against the bill itself, and joined in a minority report against the measure when it left the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Business Raps Tax Proposals Of Roosevelt collect only $55,000,000 more than it now collects in taxes.

The committee reported that the proposals carry a real program for balancing the budget. It pointed out that there is nothing in the plan to check expenditures, nor is there any indication that a reduction in expenditures is contemplated. The present need, the committee declared, is not increased taxation, but expenditures reduced to a more nearly normal level.

Committee Raps Method.

"Prudent use of the taxing power," the committee said, "would limit it to production of revenue sufficient to enable the Government to carry on its necessary functions. To attempt wide-reaching social effects through taxation involves the danger of and perversion of the taxing power.

"If it were thought advisable to propose practical confiscation of the larger personal incomes and estates, to break up the larger corporations and to press for other distibution of wealth and income measues, then such proposals should be brought to public attention directly as social and economic reforms.

"They should be discussed and determined on their merits as social reforms. To present proposals of this character as a revenue measure is to confuse thought on the part of both Congress and the public, as emphasis is placed on the revenue aspects and the real fundamental purpose is obscured. The public is misled by this confusion of title and substance and may fail to discern the real nature of the measure, which, if comprehended, might be resisted."

The committee also directed attention to the fact that the Federal Government, by monopolizing revenues, leaves fewer possible sources of revenue to the States. A graduated corporation tax, the committee said, would have a harmful effect on the economic life of the country.

Big Employment Cited.

It was pointed out that the larger corporations employ more than 70 per cent of the wage earners engaged in manufacture and that "in a majority of cases the larger corporations have been able to continue under adverse conditions, while many of the smaller companies, with less capital resources, have succumbed." On the basis of NRA reports, the committee said, higher wages are paid by large corporations than by small ones.

"It is, of course, recognized," the committee continued, "that smaller corporations perform a very useful function in carrying on the business of the country and presumably will continue to do so. Existing conditions, however, can not be ignored. As indicated, the larger corporations now employ the great mass of wage earners. To force arbitrarily a change from present conditions to smaller units would lead to dislocations and require time for adjustment. Meanwhile, there would be loss of production with resulting unemployment.

"The proposed income tax is also illogical to the extent that it is based on the assumption that the wealthiest people are found among the stockholders of the larger corporations and that such stockholders, therefore, have more ability to pay. Small or moderate-sized corporations, with a limited number of stockholders, may have among their stockholders individuals who are much wealthier than many of the shareholders of bigger corporations."

The committee pointed out that consuming power would be reduced by reduction of dividends to small stockholders.

Inheritance Tax Discussed.

On the question of inheritance taxes, the committee said that an examination of the proposals "with their confiscatory rates" clearly indicates that again the objective is not to raise revnue, but to accomplish ulterior purposes.

"A large fortune," the report said, "is not a public menace to be destroyed by taxes when its holder dies. Many such fortunes pass into the hands of excellent custodians who employ them constructively. To the extent that the desire to assure continuance in a family of the possession and development of a going business is a strong inducement to the hard application of energy and prudent administration of affairs, the knowledge that the estate and inheritance taxes will defeat such purpose would mean a lessening of incentive upon the part of men of ability. They would be unwilling also to lend themselves to the development of new enterprises.

"There are many instances throughout the country of the employment of fortunes in such a manner as assures employment, stimulates development of whole sections of a community and increases efficiency in production and distribution with benefits to consumers."

Wealth Theory Denied.

The statement of the National Association of Manufacturers declared that the tax program means that "dividends which can be paid stockholders will be reduced if the company is successful." It also says that most of the stockholders of large corporations are not wealthy.

"The proposal penalizes the man who uses good judgment by investing in a small company, which later becomes successful and makes large profits," the statement said.

"The proposal means that efficiency and success are things to be penalized—exactly contrary to our American traditions."

In the course of the debate in the Senate, Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, agreed that Congress should recess and come back in November for discussion of the tax bill. Senator Vandenberg declared the tax bill and "paying the Government's bills" should be considered together.

Two white men and one Negro succumbed. Coroner Root said as he filed inquisitions in the cases. Two of the men were working inthe field when stricken.

ple. It never gets back to the people."

"Can industry stand it?" he was asked.

"Industry can stand it—yes—but it would be like using the doors and woodwork of your house for fuel—pretty soon you would have neither house nor fire."

"Part of the scheme," he said, referring to the tax problem put before Congress, "is to get independent institutions like ours into the hands of the money leaders. Well, so far as we are concerned, we don't intend it shall work out that way. There is no independence or progress in business once a group of money lenders can tell you what to do.

"The politicians may not know it, but they are working right into the hands of that crowd. Money-lending is the only business that has prospered during the depression."

"Personally," he declared, "I am not paying any attention to this new tax scheme. I just know that there is a principle of right and wrong, and that the wrong thing will not work. I feel perfectly able to handle any situation they may create. We have been doing that all our life.

"Spending money is a greater science than getting it. Those people in Washington don't know how to spend, because they don't know how to earn money. That is why they take a course which will not only dry up the sources of wealth, but render useless such wealth as they are able to collect.

"Our institution," he said, "has always been a great conundrum to those who want to live by lending. They have sought control in many ways. But finance did not build this business and when we were born Government was content simply to govern. Now finance and Government propose to step in and take control.

"They tried it under NRA and that failed. They have tried it by financial methods and failed. Now comes the new thing (taxation). Well, we shall see how that goes. Of course, they know I am 72 years old and they probably think that something is likely to happen, but I expect to be around here a long time yet."

"Every business with a surplus has become a source of envy," he continued.

The Virgin Islands Inquiry.

Tempers, if nothing else, will have a chance to cool during the recess of the Senate sub-committee's hearings on the affairs of the Virgin Islands. Opening with a fist fight and working up to an exchange of letters between the committee chairman and a Cabinet officer that needed only an oath or two to have equalled a fishmongers' set-to, the entire proceeding presents a sorry picture of governmental dignity and decorum.

It is now inappropriate to refer to the inquiry as a Virgin Islands investigation. Every observer is agreed that the facts, both pro and con, are easily available—so small are the islands—and that the entire story could be presented in full detail within a short time. To date, however, the committee not only has spent several days in Washington hearing testimony but also has the report of one of its members who was dispatched to the Caribbean some months ago to survey the situation at first hand. It must be concluded, accordingly, that something more than the Virgin Islands is being considered. Indeed, it is clear that the benighted little possessions have been made the properties for a stage on which a much more significant drama is being played out.

The antipathy between certain Senators and the Secretary of the Interior, also the PWA Administrator, has long been recognized. That it should now be permitted to confuse the efforts of the Division of Insular Affairs to install an efficient civil service organization for the Nation's outlying territories is an inexcusable perversion of position and power.

More Pools Needed.

There is reason in the argument of the Southwest Citizens Association that the drowning in the Anacostia River of two children and their would-be rescuer might not have occurred if adequate bathing facilities, properly guarded, had been available. Of course, the spirit of adventure will always entice youngsters away from supervision. It is fair to say that even if Washington had all the pools it could use, there still would be those who would go off to wade and swim in treacherous streams.

Nevertheless, parents as well as our city planners and playground directors are concerned over the fact that Washington does not have nearly all the pools it could advantageously use during the hot months. No tragedies such as took place Wednesday are needed to apprise them that the District is woefully lacking in swimming and wading facilities. Comparisons with other cities scream the fact of Washington's meager equipment.

At the moment, nine public swimming pools and twelve wading pools are in operation in the District. Of the larger pools, five require admission fees, two being located indoors in the Central and Dunbar high schools, which are open only part of the day during summer months. Application has been made through the Works Progress Administration for $100,000 to add two more pools and nine wading troughs to the District's facilities. Since vast sums are going to be spent during the next year to create jobs, useful projects of this sort may well be undertaken. Certainly it is a legitimate obligation of government to help protect the health and, indeed, the very lives of children.

Boondoggling In The Treasury.

Four thousand relief workers are to be employed by the Treasury at a cost of approximately $5,000,000 to check returns of small income taxpayers and to detect evasions of liquor and so-called nuisance tax laws. It may be somewhat of a shock to the public to learn that the Treasury does not have an adequate force of trained men to stop these leaks. If revenue losses are believed to be substantial, there is no excuse for failure to run down delinquents and recover the amounts withheld.

Effective work of this kind, however, calls for the services of experienced men. Even the auditing of the income tax returns in the lower brackets would be a difficult task for novices. In the case of liquor and excise taxes, the investigator who is detailed to ferret out irregularities needs specialized knowledge of the taxed business as well as considerable detective skill.

Relief workers, even if selected with reasonable care, can not be expected to have the information and training essential to effective discharge of such duties. In the majority of cases, they will either be passively useless or else actively obnoxious to harassed taxpayers threatened with victimization by their ignorance.

Let us avoid boondoggling in the Treasury, even if the works progress administration finds it necessary to invent pastimes of some sort for idle white-collar workers. Eurythmic dancing, esoteric research, and just plain time consuming activities, miscalled "work," provide better outlets for relief money than any afforded by permitting amateur inspectors and checkers to play havoc with tax returns.

The Rules Of The Game.

A nation is not governed automatically. The course it follows is determined by human beings, with human aspirations and limitations, who to avoid anarchy must subject themselves to certain rules. The individuals do not differ so greatly from country to country. But in the rules of government which they accept, willingly or unwillingly, there are many patterns.

The pattern followed by the American people for more than a century and a half has been one of constitutional government. It is a pattern which clearly defines certain principles to which governors and governed are alike obliged to conform. Provision is made for modifying and revising those principles to conform with changing conditions. But no provision is made for violation of the basic rules of the game. In consequence, accumulated evidence of such violations must be regarded as being revolutionary in character, if not intent. They imply a willingness, if not a desire, to alter the governmental pattern by arbitrary methods on which the people of the United States have not passed judgment.

The revelations which are beginning to be made before the House Rules Committee are of fundamental importance because for the first time they show clear-cut evidence of the extent to which the principles of American government are being forgotten or ignored. The motives of those who take this cavalier attitude may be of the highest. Their ideals and ideas may to these proponents seem better for our social well-being than were those written into the body and the existing amendments of the Constitution. That, however, is not the issue. The question up for answer—and the sooner it is unmistakably answered the better—is simply whether or not the rules of the game are to be changed at the will of the players or of the public.

There is no call in this matter to take sides between Representative Ralph O. Brewster and Mr. Thomas F. Corcoran. It is already a part of the record that the former showed himself wavering and irresolute, where Mr. Corcoran was forceful and determined. But the choice is not between the personalities of Mr. Brewster and Mr. Corcoran. It is between responsible and irresponsible government.

In all his dynamic activities at the Capitol, Mr. Corcoran undoubtedly acted under instructions, and according to a technique of which this is only the most recent, although the most striking, of many illustrations under the New Deal. The episode is glaring largely because it shows an RFC employe helping to draft and push through a bill with which the RFC has no connection, simultaneously hounding a weak Congressman over still another project — the Passamaquoddy Dam — in which the RFC again has no connection. Helping him in these efforts was another Government official whose supposed public responsibility is to our insular possessions. This, of course, is a cross-section of totally irresponsible government.

A time-serving Congressman is certainly no asset to good government. But that deficiency, which it is the business of the electorate to cure, is less serious than the attempt of an administrative officer to step out of his proper sphere to influence irresolute legislators. For that action tears the pattern of our Government at one of its salient points—the separation of executive and legislative powers. And this is by no means the first time that the dangerous tendency of this Administration to follow quasi-dictatorial tactics has been revealed.

A utilities lobby is a vicious matter. The House Rules Committee should of course reveal all it can ascertain in this field. But far more dangerous is an executive lobby which indicates that our pattern of government is being destroyed without any public consideration of what that will involve. It is not whitewashing the utilities to say that more information on the latter trend is the vital national need. If the rules of the game are being surreptitiously altered, the public is at least entitled to know how, by whom, and why.

A New Leaf?

Almost on the eve of his statement that he was through with fighting forever, comes a report that Max Baer has retired to the corner to await a decision on round 1 of his recent marriage. Apparently the former champ had his ear on the gong almost before the mere preliminaries to a life of wedded bliss had begun. As a fighter with a reputation for good sportsmanship, Maxie should be somewhat ashamed. A certain amount of temperament, a little crabbing over adverse decisions, and a few good-natured digs about your opponent are to be expected in the marital ring. But it would certainly be ill-timed, not to say ridiculous, for either challenger or challenged to claim a knock-out before even the first blows had been exchanged.

Some of Baer's admirers claim that he was out of condition when he fought Braddock recently and lost the championship. Certainly after the first few rounds, he suffered a decided handicap in an injury to his hand. But a few impartial observers have felt for some time that the champ was overworking his hand in his efforts at "turning over a new leaf." First he was a fighter, then he became a movie star. He turned over another leaf and became a vaudeville attraction. Then he turned fighter again, to turn from that role to marriage. It is good to hear his denials that he is through with that occupation already.

Cut your clowning, Maxie, and give yourself a break. You've always been a decent fighter and liked in spite of Bergerac tendencies to swagger and talk too much. You said when you lost to Braddock that there were "no alibis." That was a nice gesture and gave all credit to the best man. And above all, remember Grant Rice's great sporting rule that, in the end, it's "not that you won or lost, but how you played the game."

Court And Constitution.

Speaking under the auspices of the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia, Representative Sisson, of New York, declared that the Supreme Court has usurped the power to declare laws passed by Congress invalid on the ground of unconstitutionality. The arguments advanced in support of this contention are not without force. Some students of constitutional history agree that the framers of the fundamental law did not contemplate such exercise of power by the judiciary. Chief Justice Marshall's dictum, asserting the right of the Supreme Court to declare a law void, brought protests in his day. And when that right was exercised years later in the famous Dred Scott decision, President Lincoln declared, "Somebody has to reverse that decision and we mean to reverse it."

In recent years the court has invalidated various laws enacted by Congress, particularly those assumed to be an exercise of power to regulate interstate commerce. As the commerce clause provides one of the chief means for extending Federal control over economic activities, angry denunciations of the court and demands that it be shorn of its powers have followed every one of the important commerce-clause decisions adverse to the Government.

It can not be denied that the courts make laws to some extent when they undertake to interpret them. Moreover, when the Supreme Court decides that a law is in conflict with the Constitution its judgment is not infallible, and later may be reversed. Nevertheless, experience has shown that the court offers the people much needed protection against congressional usurpation of powers denied to the Federal Government under the Constitution.

If Congress were free to ignore restrictions upon its authority whenever an emergency, actual or imaginary, developed the Constitution would soon be reduced to a scrap of paper. An impartial, non-political body with the prestige of the Supreme Court is essential to safeguard the States and the people against loss of their guaranteed rights. The need has never been greater than at the present time, when hastily devised legislative experiments are being offered as recovery measures, with slight regard for their constitutional validity.

The alleged lack of flexibility in the present system of judicial checks has been sanctioned by time and justified by results. Instead of being a handicap, it has proved to be an advantage, because it prevents hasty and thoughtless action which might radically change the structure of our government without the knowledge or consent of the people. A salutary degree of inflexibility does not prevent changes whenever it becomes evident that the Constitution stands in the way of legislative reforms demanded by a large majority. The power of amendment refutes the charge that the judiciary is in a position to override the popular will.

If the people of the United States desire to extend the regulatory activities of Congress beyond the limits now sanctioned by the Constitution, they can do so. But before they undertake to centralize power still further in the Federal Government, it would be well to remember the warning of Woodrow Wilson. In his "Constitutional Government in the United States," he said:

> It would be fatal to our political vitality really to strip the States of their powers and transfer them to the Federal Government. It has been the privilege of separate development secured to the several regions of the country by the Constitution . . . the privilege of independent local opinion and individual conviction, which has given speed, facility, vigor and certainty to the processes of our economic and political growth. To buy temporary ease and convenience for the performance of a few great tasks of the hour at the expense of that would be to pay too great a price and to cheat all generations for the sake of one."

"A passenger riding on established air lines would have to fly 392,141 miles in order to meet with a fatal accident," a statistician assures us. It would scarcely be worth the trouble.

"There is a limit to the minuteness of particles. That limit is zero."—Einstein. At last—an Einstein theory which we can understand!

Billions For Armaments.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A significant comment on the state of the world is the League of Nations' report that a total of $4,900,000,000 gold was expended by the nations for armaments last year. Basing its figures on the old parity, disregarding depreciation, the report finds this to be an increase of $450,000,000 over 1933.

Could the vast sum, or even a major part of it, have been diverted to the ways of peace, what a wealth of improvements the world would have had! The money went for battleships, airplanes, munitions, training soldiers. Could it have been put into education, medical research, public works and the training of youth for useful work, it would have been a benefit and a blessing instead of a waste and a peril. And these billions, it must not be forgotten, are ground out of taxpayers at a time of dire economic need. The world pays dearly for its fears and hatreds and rivalries.

The President's Right.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In its editorial, "A Really Dangerous Lobby," July 10, The Post conveniently forgets that no charges of activity by Government officials were heard until after a swarm of some 600 power trust lobbyists descended on Congress and resorted to threats and intimidation to defeat the provision of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill proposing to abolish unnecessary holding utility corporations.

Now, if there is any one thing the President has been given a mandate to do by the overwhelming support the voters have given him, it is to abolish Insullism, that detestable practice by which the public is overcharged for power, then sold watered stock in utility holding companies on the supposition that such rates are to be continued forever. Very little is heard about the billions of savings which this practice "wiped out." It is the view of this writer that, faced with the most insidious and ruthless lobby that has ever threatened Congress, the President was well within his rights and duty in seeking to offset its influence. After all, he is responsible to the people; the power lobby is responsible to no one.

The Post would be more logical if it used its influence to abolish lobbying by the utilities and then attacked any like activities by Government officials. A. W. D.

Washington, July 10.

The Real Oddity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have found much of interest in The Post's entertaining department of Washington Oddities, but I must take exception to the picture in The Post of July 8, of the horse watering trough at Thirteenth and E streets northwest, as belonging in this category.

So long as we still have horses as beasts of burden, and there are many of them in this city, watering troughs are not an oddity but a necessity. Nearly all of the watering troughs in the city have been donated by humanitarians. Other creatures, especially lost and wandering dogs, also birds and pigeons, slake their thirst at these troughs. There would be fewer silly hydrophobia scares if stray or lost dogs could readily find water when they need it.

The oddity is that in this city, that professes to be humane, there should be so few watering troughs and that these are so often allowed to be blocked from use by parked automobiles (thereby breaking a traffic regulation) belonging to thoughtless and unimaginative owners. J. PATRICIA BATES.

Washington, July 10.

Retirement Of Government Clerks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The plea which is now being agitated by Government clerks for optional retirement at 60 and after 30 years' service would doubtless be supported by all, provided they understood the matter.

There seems no stronger reason for such support, especially in these humanitarian times, than the fact that the few clerks who might ask for retirement at the early age of 60 would be only those who were fearing a physical breakdown, and also fearing that if they did not give up they might soon become a drug upon Uncle Sam's market. It is doubtless understood by all, without explanation, that few clerks are ever willing to leave the service unless there is some dire reason for their so doing.

According to the present law, it would seem that clerks can not retire before they are 68 or 70 years of age, unless they are afflicted with such hopeless maladies as total paralysis, total blindness, incurable cancer, or serious heart failure—and even to get out upon these hopeless maladies the medical board must testify positively that they are incurable.

Would it not seem more advantageous from many standpoints to let those clerks who fear they are facing a breakdown retire before they reach the culmination? From the standpoint of the amount of work turned out, would it not be better to let them retire at 60 rather than to have them lie around for eight or ten years longer inwardly fearing the culmination? Could not younger and fresher clerks be put in their places, and perhaps in a short time learn the work and turn out more of it than these older clerks, particularly clerks holding such jobs as may require a constant physical strain?

Some persons not familiar with the subject are apprehensive lest too many clerks might retire at one time if given the optional privilege at 60—but how well do those familiar with the matter understand the tenacity with which Government clerks hang on unless there may be dire reasons for their tearing themselves away!

Even the clerks of 70, especially those prepared to do technical work and who are still mentally alert, sometimes ask for extensions. And this is rightfully granted when possible, since their services may be of great value to the Government. But, naturally, the wishes of all desiring to remain after reaching the age of 70 can not be considered. There must be a compulsory limit somewhere, and all reasonable clerks approve of the present compulsory plan—compulsory at 70 (when the usefulness of most clerks is at its ebb, and their lives as well), and after 30 years' service.

The clerks as a body want optional retirement at 60 and after 30 years' service. No sensible clerk would want either the age or the years of service of the optional plan lowered, for they well know that the retirement fund, which they have saved from their own salaries over the years, must be safely guarded. And the sensible clerks further know that this optional plan at 60 would cause so few to withdraw that it would hardly make a dent in the fund—and the few clerks, too, who might withdraw would doubtless be a few of the more conscientious ones who know that if they do not get out before their failing condition grows more serious they might break down completely and perhaps for a number of years be a drug on Uncle Sam's market. Washington, July 11.

From A Boy Scout's Mother.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the name of the Boy Scouts of America and American principles, what "New Dealer" or "Farley man" planned the "To Shatter Tradition" program of the Boy Scouts as described in The Post of July 8 for their meeting here next month?

What proud mother wouldn't rather see her Boy Scout march in a parade than have him stand in salute while the President and his train ride in review and stage a Mussolini show? Why not have them don black shirts and give the Fascist salute and be done with it? And someone please tell me since when have flags and bunting become undignified?

Incidentally, I wonder how long the people of this country will stand for all the radical changes and repeal of all old moral laws that have taken years to build for the protection of youth and country. Why take advantage of a depression to overthrow our Government?

Pine Tree Squib.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Answering all carping critics who claim the District's summer climate to be the worst inflicted upon civilized humanity anywhere, I wish to spike this malicious gibe by rebutting that the jungles of the Federal Malay States, South America and equatorial Africa have it beat to a simmer, there being no soda fountains or pretzels with the beer, and the lengthy snakes and undomesticated animals being rather intrusive and smelly.

Since Washington's climate picked me for an inmate to spend my so-called vacation in, I have been sending the old folks at home the following pithy squib in a humane effort to offset the above base rumors:

> Having a frying time. Wish you were here. Why, oh, why, doesn't Congress pack up its other shirt and go home, or stumping, or fishing en masse on Vin Astor's yacht?

Ethiopia As David?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Conversing with a gentleman whose profession carried him to every continent on the globe, I asked him what he thought would be the outcome of a conflict in Ethiopia. His reply was that it would result in the ruin of Italy. Win or lose, Mussolini would engender hatred toward Italy of all the colored races of the world.

From Basel, Switzerland, comes this word:

> Bankers attending the monthly meeting of the board of the Bank for International Settlements expressed a definite fear Mussolini's African campaign would bring Italy to ruin, and cause such violent repercussions upon neutral currency other powers would be forced to throttle Mussolini.

A few years ago, Mussolini threw defiance in the face of the Almighty. So also did Goliath of Gath in Bible times. God's David crushed the Giant. History may repeat itself in Ethiopia.

Outlawed Cockfighting

COCKFIGHTING, despite a long-time ban in Washington, Maryland and Virginia, still has its devotees among sportsmen in this part of the country. In the outlying rural districts fights are still held, though they must necessarily be clothed in secrecy. This sport has been called the cruelest, the most inhuman of all sports. Public opinion discourages it; stern measures are taken with those who fall into the clutches of the law, but cockfighting flourishes nevertheless.

* * * *

It may be a tobacco barn in southern Maryland or a stable in the hunting country of Virginia where the stern contest is to take place. News of the event is discreetly passed along by means of the grapevine route. On the appointed evening sportsmen from the city, country gentlemen, stableboys and farmhands gather around a circular pit. Money changes hands. The feathered warriors crow lustily. Two of them are groomed for the first contest by attaching razor-like steel gaffs on their spurs. They are set down in the middle of the arena and the battle is on. Each measures up his opponent, his beady eyes filled with hatred. There is crowing and fluttering about as the fighters in true pugilistic fashion aim their blows at one another's throats. Each thrust is filled with deadly intent, for there can be but one outcome, victory for one of the fighters, death for the other.

In Maryland there are often cockfighting tournaments in which one enthusiast will enter a stable of fighters against another. Like boxing matches, there are various preliminaries, leading up to the main event on which the big money is wagered. The spectator has the privilege of betting on the individual fighters or an entire team.

* * * *

Gamecocks are a combination of three elemental qualities, inordinate pride, unswerving courage and bitter hatred. A brood of young ones will live together in peace until they are old enough to be trimmed, a process which involves the shaping up of neck and tail feathers, the filing down of their natural spurs, and the cutting of the fleshy crests on their heads. Once this is done, it is a mysterious signal that the young cocks have come of age, and unless they are immediately separated, they will fight each other in a grand free-for-all which may end in a universal slaughter. If two cocks are placed in adjoining cages, they will ignore the most attractive hens, and rather spend their time trying to get through the wires at one another's throats.

Fighting cocks, like race horses, vary according to their pedigrees and their training. Aristocrats of the pit are carefully trained in advance for their murderous work. A good handler gives his young hopefuls plenty of practice, sparring with them with covered fists. But many fighting cocks, and particularly those in the nearby rural sections, are merely turned loose in the woods with one or two hens, where they have little difficulty in taking care of themselves. Many handlers prefer this preliminary training, for they claim it brings out the animals' most ferocious qualities. Hens who have foraged in the woods often take on the fighting qualities of their mates, especially when it is a question of defending their young. The only practical method of catching such a roving family is to sneak upon them at night when they are roosting in the trees.

The history of the game chicken is clouded in the mists of antiquity. Where he came from is not definitely known, although there are some grounds for believing that he may have originated in Asia. There are records of game chickens in Persia as early as several centuries before Christ.

The first American game chickens were imported in the seventeenth century from England into the Southern colonies. Although now they are raised practically all over the country, it is in the South that they have had the most illustrious history. Romantic tales are told about the old-time champions who established such impressive strings of victories that no owner could be found willing to risk his fighters with them. Such fabulous gladiators (so the stories go) had to enter the pit in disguise, with their feathers trimmed differently or their coloring changed. Once in the pit, however, a lone, death-dealing thrust was all that was necessary to reveal the famous fighter.

The original strain of English game chickens has now been crossed and recrossed with foreign breeds until now a number of native breeds have been developed. Occasionally in the process of cross-breeding, "yellow" gamecocks will appear. These birds flee when confronted with an opponent. Like all fighting cocks, their fate is a bloody death, but it is one shorn of glory. The "yellow" ones die to provide a feast of Southern fried chicken. But the famous fighters, some of whom have been known to live for as long as eight years, meet their death crowing to the last gasp and their names are enshrined among the immortals of the pit.

Cockfighting is clearly a sport that has survived from cruder times. Law and public opinion have done what they could to stamp it out, but they have succeeded only in driving it into the byways and rural sections of America where other survivals of earlier times still live on.

Spurred Into Activity.

IN order that credit will be given where due when and if the Republicans win in 1936 the record should be clear that it was Charlie Curtis who spurred the National Committee into action. It is not recalled, in fact, when one man's words had quicker or more momentous effect.

One day Charlie said that the committee ought to get a new chairman and get to work. Charlie said it sort of easily, too, not like he intended to crusade to this end. The impression was that Charlie was just talking along and among other things he thought was that the committee ought to have a new chairman and get to work. The effect was almost instantaneous. Within less time than it takes to tell, to speak just a little in hyperbole, Chairman Fletcher had sprung into action.

• • • •

Action under the New Deal has come to a great extent to be associated with announcements. Anyway it was an announcement that signalized Chairman Fletcher's springing to his guns. He announced that Mrs. Hoyal had been named as director of the women's division. The effect was electrifying because it had almost been forgotten that the Republicans had a women's division.

As if he had gone off so fast, however, that he couldn't stop—action was following action just like that (a pop of the fingers)—there followed almost immediately the announcement that a publicity man had been appointed, Mr. Harry Brown. It has not been commented upon but that really marks the opening of the campaign. Every campaign Harry goes over with the Republican committee and then at the end returns to his newspaper. Just as the robin signalizes the advent of spring Harry's return to the committee means that the fighting is on.

With the appointment of Harry and Mrs. Hoyal, Chairman Fletcher has stopped to rest. Such an outburst of action as this was enough to exhaust anyone. After he gets his second breath it is presumed he will embark upon a persistent statement campaign designed to whittle the Administration's popularity down to nothing or at least nothing of any consequence.

• • • •

The truth is that there is really nothing effective Chairman Fletcher or the committee can do unless the Republican opposition in the Senate can be jogged out of its present lethargic attitude. The prospects for that are very slim. Instead of opposing anything or attempting to expose the Administration's defects they seem to be striving to make themselves the most agreeable opposition a majority party ever had.

There is a shining example of this in their willingness to get the Administration out of its tax jam. While it is not definitely known that Mr. Roosevelt, himself, has rejected the injection of his so-called share-the-wealth program, it is no secret that the members of his party in the House and Senate have. The very strong impression is that the President has, too.

But the Republican Senators, instead of pressing their advantage here, are doing everything they can to pull the Administration's chestnuts out of the fire. They have set up the demand that the bill be carried over until the fall or until next session. The Democrats are saying "no, no, our sincerity has been questioned and we are going right along now." They are just as anxious to get away from here as the Republicans could possibly be and after they have let the Republicans demand postponement a while longer they will break down and say, "Well, if you insist." The Republicans know this is what will happen, but they can't resist the temptation to be helpful. The belief is that if they would press their advantage they would have the Democrats routed in less than a month.

After all, the injection of the tax program has already shown that the Administration had nothing more than a political gesture in mind. It has shown further that all the talk about socking the rich to pay the bill has been so much bunk.

And what has been most dangerous to the Administration is the realization that a real tax bill must sooner or later be passed and that the taxes will not be confined to the rich. If one can follow the information coming in from throughout the country this realization has proved a severe shock, because it had been thought Mr. Roosevelt was a magician.

The Cat And The Mouse

Italy Stalks Ethiopia, Intent On Avenging Humiliating Defeat At Adowa While Using 'Manifest Destiny' As Excuse For Taking Over Resources Sorely Needed At Home.

HIGH and cool on the northern tip of the East African tableland stands Addis Ababa, capital city of Ethiopia, toward which the eyes of an anxious world are now turning. For, like a cat with a cornered mouse, Italy is stalking the unhappy empire and the international storm signals are flying.

Poised to pounce from the deserts of nearby Eritrea and Italian Somaliland, the Roman cat has its eyes fixed on the rich minerals, lush tropical products and the untapped oil of its victim. But Ethiopia, a land as large as Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa and Missouri combined, and with a population of 5,000,000 Christians and 7,000,000 Mohammedans, is not yet caught.

The ancients knew of Ethiopia, early Egyptian rulers having counted it among their domains. Hebrew trade routes wound into the isolated territory centuries ago and, according to tradition, the Queen of Sheba once ruled the land, from whom present-day Ethiopia royalty claims descent.

Greek culture reached Ethiopia in the first century A. D. under the Ptolemies, and in the third century an Alexandrine bishop introduced Christianity to the land, meeting with such success that in the fifth century Ethiopia avenged a Christian pogrom across the Red Sea, thereby winning for itself the richest part of Arabia. But with the Mohammedan conquest of Egypt in the seventh century these Africans were driven back to their highlands, there to remain in seclusion for almost 1,000 years.

• • • •

WHEN they re-emerged, Europe had pulled itself out of the Dark Ages. In the fifteenth century a mission was sent out from Portugal to find a mystical Christian king, known as Prester John, rumored to be ruler of a Far Eastern peppie. Arriving in Ethiopia, the Portuguese revived the hibernating nation only to let it sink back into ravagery as the star of Portugal waned. Little more was heard of the country until the late eighteenth century, when British explorers searching out the headwaters of the Nile ventured over its borders. Today a part of Britain's interest in the fate of Ethiopia connects with her concern for the safeguarding of the life-blood of Egypt, the Nile.

In 1805 a British mission concluded an alliance with the most powerful tribal chief and obtained a port on the Red Sea to thwart France if it secured Egypt in a division of the Turkish empire with Russia. The mission was followed by a stream of missionaries, somewhat naively bent on converting one of the oldest Christian nations in the world.

As the nation slowly reawakened, a semblance of national consciousness began to be superimposed on the traditional feudal system, and in 1313 one Sahaile Selassie consolidated three provinces and proclaimed himself negus nagast, king of kings. Under his enlightened rule, the country prospered. Envoys of good will arrived from the Governor General of India and the court of Louis Philippe, and Ethiopia assumed the attitude of a sovereign state. Soon an English diplomat appeared presenting credentials from Queen Victoria. But a diplomatic blunder soon landed him in irons, requiring an expedition of 32,000 Britishers to rescue him. And so Ethiopia was initiated into the mysteries of European pacts of friendship and their consequences.

• • • •

THEN for the first time Italy, itself new as a nation state, came to Ethiopia. A port had been purchased on the Red Sea from a local sultan in 1870 and slowly Italian influence spread along the coast, to the resentment of Ethiopia, who saw her outlets to the world being fenced off. Ultimately war broke out but on the appearance of 20,000 armed Italians Menelik I, the Bismarck of Ethiopia, was forced to sign away the strip now known as Eritrea. The treaty, however, contained a section which Italy maintained bound Ethiopia to utilize Rome in conversations with the world at large, but which Menelik, reading his Amharic copy, construed as leaving such procedure optional. Relations, accordingly, were far from cordial.

Meanwhile, Britain, by a secret paper, has recognized Ethiopia as within the sphere of Italian influence. In return, Italy recognized the British claims to the Upper Nile country. As for France, the other European nation engaged in African pursuits, she toyed with a scheme to link her Congo territory with her port of Djibouti, near the entrance to the Red Sea. It was the era of colonization, ivory, spices and gold dust.

But war flared up again with Italy and, in 1896, 90,000 Ethiopians butchered 19,000 poorly marshaled Italians at Adowa. This humiliating defeat is the basis for much of Mussolini's present vindictiveness toward Ethiopia. The victory, however, served to draw the attention of all Europe. Boundaries of adjacent mandates and possessions were defined and France began its railroad from Addis Ababa to Djibouti and the sea.

• • • •

IN 1906 a most significant (or insignificant, as it proves today) treaty was effected between England, France and Italy to "maintain intact the integrity of Ethiopia." Thus Menelik and his present successor, Selassie, thought the future of their nation secure. And when, in 1923, Italy pledged "perpetual friendship" to Ethiopia, all doubts of everlasting autonomy were thrown over.

But the very wave of commercial expansion which brought Ethiopia to the peak of its development now threatens to be its undoing. Notwithstanding that Ethiopia has always been recognized as independent and notwithstanding that it was admitted to the League of Nations in 1923 and later was a signatory of the Pact of Paris, Italy now trains its guns on Addis Ababa. Seemingly, only the torrential rains hold off the attack and they are due to let up by September.

Ethiopia has begged the league to stop this rape. Last week a plaintive cable asked Washington to do something, in the name of the Kellogg Pact, to restrain Italy. But all in vain to date. And Ethiopia arms as best she can, knowing from long experience that European pacts in Africa mean little and the precepts of Christ mean less when talk of "manifest destiny" and "the white man's burden" are applied to a nation rich in the natural resources Italy lacks.

The Pulitzer Prize Play

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

THE advisory board of the School of Journalism of Columbia University did well in giving the Pulitzer Prize this year to Zoe Akins, for her drama, "The Old Maid." The committee of three men appointed to recommend plays were unanimous in recommending it; and surely, of all the plays in a rather indifferent season, this one stands out most conspicuously for all-round merit.

The play was taken, as the playbills informed the public, from Edith Wharton's novel, "The Old Maid;" even as, some years ago, the Pulitzer Prize was awarded to Zona Gale, for her play, "Miss Lulu Bett," which was taken from the novel of the same name; although in this instance, the dramatist was also the author of the novel.

• • • •

Miss Akins has written many successful plays, and is a skillful dramatist. She saw the inherent dramatic possibilities in Mrs. Wharton's story, and certainly made the most of them.

All good drama has in it the element of conflict—either between individuals or between an individual and destiny, or environment, or whatever you please to call it. In this play the conflict is sharp and steadily increases in intensity. It is deeply affecting, and at every performance many in the audience could not restrain their emotion.

It was magnificently acted by Judith Anderson and by Helen Menken, who were as excellent in the quieter and more subtle phases, as they were in the climaxes of passion. The scenery and costumes became the talk of the town. They were designed by young Mr. Chaney, a graduate of the Yale University School of Drama.

• • • •

For my part, I am very glad that every year the award of the Pulitzer Prize stirs up so much argument and controversy; the sharper the better. Surely it is a good thing for the American public to become excited over a question of art.

Winchester Milk Expected to Rise

Price Boosts Threatened if Ordinance Passes.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., July 11.—An increase in the price of milk in Winchester is anticipated, one dealer already having announced his intentions, as a result of an ordinance proposed in common council and which will come up for third reading soon.

Dr. L. M. Allen, health officer, recently appeared before council and urged passage of the ordinance to eliminate unwholesome milk, which, authorities say, now finds its way into the city. Dr. C. R. Anderson, mayor, and Dr. Ralph B. Snapp, a member of the council, also have been active in seeking action to raise the standards of milk sold in the city.

Under the proposed ordinance, only grade A milk will be sold and the conditions under which grade A is produced, it is contended, make it necessary for the price of milk to be raised. Most of the dairies now are charging 10 cents per quart.

Don't Mention It.

By Ed Reed

"Whatda ya mean—am I sure he's got a horseshoe in his glove!"

Men, being men, can not tell you very much about women. For instance, to the young-man-in-love the opposite sex is all sweetness and light; the bachelor, who has dodged the ladies for years, believes them to be scheming minxes, and the married man is probably afraid to tell you what he really thinks.

Therefore, to get a true opinion of women, you must go to a woman for your information . . . and so we've gone to Miss Malvina Lindsay, editor of The Washington Post's woman's pages, to find out about those lovely, and sometimes sweet creatures who do so much to make our lives happy and miserable. And Miss Lindsay certainly tells us, and all other readers of The Post, about "The Gentle Sex." You'll find her impressions of her sisters . . . and brothers, too . . . in The Post each Sunday morning to entertain . . . and educate you. Each week she writes this amusing, intelligent column which so satirically punctures so many of our illusions, and which gives us an insight into the devious ways of women.

For example, she outlines the character of Tactful Tillie, who never comes right out and tells her friends they are getting fat. Oh, no! Tactful Tillie merely sniffs, "Are'nt you getting a bit stout, dearie?" Tactful Tillie, Miss Lindsay also reveals, prides herself on being able to find out disagreeable things by a method which is practically painless . . . to her.

Or Miss Lindsay describes the conversation at the Sunday dinner table; and her description is as true to life as the family laundry line. You can recognize Uncle Henry, who wants to talk politics, and Aunt Susan, who simply must tell Cousin Mary about those perfectly darling little needlepoint footstools she saw downtown for only $2.98, or, if you read carefully, you might recognize yourself!

We are sure that Miss Lindsay's sardonic humor will please you as much as it pleases us . . . we think it's one of the best features in The Sunday Post. Gently, oh, so very gently, the barb of her wit penetrates . . . but you're laughing so much you don't mind the sting.

"The Gentle Sex," which has become one of the best-liked columns in The Sunday Post, may be found each Sunday morning on the woman's pages of

Voluntary Code Weak, Asserts Labor Review

Survey of Business by A. F. of L. Speaks of Extensive Pay Cuts.

By the Associated Press.

The American Federation of Labor asserted last night that "widespread wage reductions and lengthening of hours" immediately following the Supreme Court's NRA decision demonstrated the weakness of voluntary codes.

Within a few days, it said, over a million workers were affected. While saying it was too early to measure the entire effect of the decision, the Federation added that "this movement is steadily gathering force" and Labor Department statistics will show it soon.

These statements were made in the federation's monthly survey of business, which listed these additional consequences of the decision:

"Elimination of code regulations has brought a series of price declines and a return to unfair competitive practices, which mean a difficult readjustment, and, as a result, business activity continues at a low level.

"Most observers expect, however, that major readjustments will be completed by fall and business will be ready for another move forward.

"Business journals are emphasizing the view that Congress is no longer the Nation's lawmaker. Acts of Congress do not become law until they have the Supreme Court's stamp of approval. Leading industrialists have announced that they intend to ignore the Wagner labor disputes act, to bring a court test. Business is losing much of its apprension over the so-called reform legislation.

"Even before the death of NRA, workers' buying power was gradually losing ground. Without code labor provisions, the shortage of buying power will reach serious proportions. This shortage will not be obvious at first for, as industrial activity increases, rising employment will obscure it.

"Meanwhile, business is fundamentally in a far stronger position than it was year ago and most observers expect gains by next fall which will lift production higher than at any time since 1929."

Auto Accident Victim Asks $25,000 Damages

Damages of $25,000 were asked of Leon A. McMurray in a suit filed in the District Supreme Court yesterday by Paul Richardson, 1941 A street southeast, who charged that he was seriously injured May 19 when, while he was a passenger in McMurray's car, the latter lost control of it and the machine collided with a telegraph pole.

Through Attorneys Alvin Newmyer and Lewis H. Shapiro, Richardson said he was invited to take a ride with McMurray, who drove out into nearby Maryland. The plaintiff contended the driver was not obeying the Maryland traffic laws when the accident happened.

Gingham Club Band to Mark An Anniversary

Santmyer to Celebrate Completion of First Year There Today.

By Chanticleer.

Jimmy Santmyer, the young fellow who moved his band into the Gingham Club for the summer season and remained to become the leading attraction at the Childs rendezvous, will be doing a bit of a celebration today.

It was just a year ago that Jimmy and his boys moved into the Gingham Club after entertaining the folks at the Arlington roof, the general idea being for the Santmyers to play the summer out.

So they played the summer . . . the fall . . . the winter . . . and here they are with the first anniversary to be fittingly observed today and another year of Gingham clubbing in the offing.

• • • •

Jimmy Santmyer, incidentally, is one of the youngest, if not the baby, of the orchestra leaders of this man's city.

His favorite tune these days is "I Wished On the Moon" . . . and the two ditties most requested by the customers are "Chasing Shadows" and "Melancholy Baby."

Mary Jo Hamilton, the Gingham Club's little mistress of ceremonies, probably influences those requests, by the way. They're practically made to order for her voice.

• • • •

It may be Santmyer's anniversary at the Gingham Club . . . but down at the Hangar Club is the birthday of the whole establishment. The high spot of the celebrating in observance thereof is a new cocktail . . . named the Hangar Hairraiser.

Topping the floor show is Daredevil Welch . . . fire-eater and escape artist . . . who has traveled with circuses . . . and circuses . . . and yet more circuses. Then there's Lee and Cody O'Neil, hoofers . . . Anita Wyland, modernistic dancer . . . LaVess and Margo, of the adagio school of dancing . . . Ted Valentine, ventriloquist, who is accompanied by his faithful Chico . . . Roy Mills, tenor, and, last, but not least . . . Al Howard, the master of affairs.

• • • •

Item for the ladies: The next time the gentlemen in your lives explain that the congregating will be at the Willard's Round Robin . . . in which no feminine foot is set . . . and, of course, that carries with it a prohibition of your presence . . . just remind them that some of the best congregating going on these torrid afternoons is just around the corner from the Round Robin in the Willard's cocktail lounge . . . next door to the main dining room. You're welcome.

• • • •

The Hawaiians at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat went on test the other night . . . when a gentleman who knew his Islands . . . calmly sat himself down and requested one Hawaiian number after another. Before he left he was listening to Hawaiian numbers he had never heard before.

• • • •

Joe Ratner, violinist with the National Symphony Orchestra, and Eddie Weitzel, accordionist, also are being heard these days at cocktail hours at the Hamilton's Alexander Room . . . We say "also" because we neglected them earlier in the week while mentioning the musiks at the Alexander Room . . . Another note to the ladies . . . an admonition from Pete Macias . . . to wit: Please do not pick the cornflowers worn by the gentlemen of the band in their coat lapels . . . they really are a fake and a fraud . . . not real flowers at all.

• • • •

Musician and a Fan Dancer

Meighan Under Knife; Condition Is Favorable

New York, July 11 (AP).—Thomas Meighan, the actor, underwent a serious operation at Doctors Hospital here today after a hurried trip from the West Coast.

The hospital, while withholding all details of the operation and the nature of the star's illness, said tonight his "condition was favorable." It was added, however, that the crisis would not be reached for several days. Meighan is 56 years old.

Recall to Work Ends Honeymoon of Ayres

Del Monte, Calif., July 11 (AP).—The belated honeymoon of Ginger Rogers and Lew Ayres will be short-lived.

En route to San Francisco and Hawaii their trip was interrupted here today by a telegram from Hollywood, ordering the actors to return "at once" to start work on a new picture.

They were married eight months ago. Film duties prevented a honeymoon.

Food Up 37% and Rent 10 Since 1933, Statistician Tells Arbitrators.

Washington food prices have soared 37 per cent and rents 10 per cent since 1933, union representatives yesterday told a board named to arbitrate a Capital Transit Co. wage dispute.

O. David Zimring, a statistician, who directed an independent survey of living costs, submitted the data at a hearing in George Washington University Law School auditorium.

On behalf of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America, Zimring reported the average working man required a five-room house on which rent now averaged $456 a year. He listed as "extras" heat at $78 a year and gas and electricity at $63 a year.

Zimring also contended a survey in 13 comparable cities of more than 300,000 population showed the average wage of motormen and conductors was 66½ cents an hour as compared with the 55 cents paid here and the 85 cents demanded by the union.

The union will continue to present its evidence today. The employers will begin introducing their testimony next week. The board has been asked to negotiate a mutually satisfactory three-year contract.

Members of the board are Frank W. Swacker, former Interstate Commerce Commission examiner, chairman; Charlton Ogburn, attorney for the union, and Edmund L. Jones, company counsel.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

New York, July 11.

Moving noiseless about the bedroom, on the second floor of a Deal, N. J. mansion, so as not to awaken the rest of the household, the pale-faced Broadway columnist would have presented a curious picture to anyone bursting upon the scene. He stood in the center of the room to which he had lugged a small table and four bottles. With infinite care he poured and mixed equal portions of witch hazel, olive oil and vinegar, and then shook them together vigorously. Fondly he looked at this curious mixture which was to be spread over his angular body before exposing it to the sun on the beach. "Before nightfall," the pale creature told his reflection in the mirror, "this pale skin will be mahogany-tinted. When I return to the Broadway night clubs, the chorus girls will wonder what they ever saw in Max Baer or Clark Gable." Inflamed by this boast, the pale-faced man clutched the bottle containing the magic mixture by the neck and scampered down the winding staircase. To Norman, the man-servant, he met in the hall, the pale-faced writer said anxiously: "I hope I didn't wake up the rest of the guests?" The impeccable Norman shook his head: "No, Mister Sullivan. They all went to the beach two hours ago." For the purpose of this paragraph, as Norman said this, the clock struck twelve.

• • • •

The sun lay hard and bright on the West End Casino when the columnist arrived. It was a perfect day for his purpose. "Cocktails?" asked the attendant who took his admission money, nodding toward the bottle. "My good man," said the columnist, "this is the Lee Shubert sun tan mixture which I used at Miami." The attendant looked at it attentively: "It looks something like green pea soup, don't it?" I had not thought of the simile, but the attendant was correct. "Wait until you see me late this afternoon," I said. "I will be a rich mahogany color." The attendant nodded abstractedly: The last guy who told me that was taken out of here with a sunstroke, and it was not a mahogany-colored sunstroke."

• • • •

The floor of the bathhouse was cold and clammy. In the next room a young child asked over and over again for an ice cream cone. Cheerily, the columnist undressed and pried himself into a bathing suit of royal blue. Thus attired, he looked into the small looking-glass and at first did not recognize the unhealthy-looking creature there revealed. A bit depressed by this vision, he stepped out into the aisle between the locker rooms and made for the pool. The sun-scorched stones burned his feet, the bright sun blinked his eyes, but lifting his feet gingerly, he reached the chairs where sat his host and hostess. The hostess could not repress her start of surprise as the pale apparition appeared, his bottle clutched in his hand: "You are built just like a writer," said the hostess. "He will look better," said the host, "when he gets some sun on his cadaverous frame."

• • • •

Two hours later the columnist was coming to a nice broil: "You had better come in here out of the sun," said the hostess, solicitously. My only answer was to swab myself industriously with another layer of the magic mixture. They begged me to retire from the conflict fifteen minutes later, but now the sun had brought on a terrific attack of stubbornness and I would not give in. Curious chills were running up and down my spine and playing across the shoulder blades. The skin on the upper part of my instep was red and smarting. The thighs, just above the knees, felt as if a swarm of bees had settled there. I took a plunge in the pool and the cold water almost paralyzed me. I withdrew my red body from the water into which I had ducked it, and walked gingerly along the hot stones to my beach-chair.

• • • •

Sitting there moodily, I reviewed the amazing situation. This bottled mixture had fended off the sun at Miami, and the sun at Miami is stronger in ultra-violet ray content than the sun at West End, N. J. Yet the cold chills that were now rushing up and down and sideways across my spare figure were undeniable evidence that I not only was badly sunburned, but probably on the verge of a sunstroke. Dazedly, I saw a lady and a young girl standing before me: "Mr. Sullivan, would you autograph this for my little girl?" With a terrific effort I lifted the pencil and scrawled my name. "You know, I used that sunburn recipe you carried in your column," said the lady, "and I get the evenest tan I've ever had, I always read your—." She broke off in horror. Accusingly she pointed a finger at me: "Why, mister Sullivan, you are as red as a lobster."

• • • •

I dragged her down to the chair beside me: "Sh-h-h," I said. "Oh, I see," she smirked, "with you it's a case of 'do what I say, don't do what I do.'" She glared triumphantly at me. Sadly I explained that I had used my own Miami recipe. One-third witch-hazel, one-third olive oil, one-third vinegar. "But you forgot the vaseline," she screamed. "Look, here it is, right in your column." She yanked a tattered piece of newspaper out of her purse and pointed out the line: "Over this apply a thin layer of vaseline." Painfully, I hobbled back to my bathhouse. I heard one woman say and there was a sneer in her voice: "Why, he's the one who printed that sunburn recipe." But I was too burned up to stop and explain.

What Theaters And Parks Are Offering Next

Screen, Stage and Outdoor Amusement for New Week Announced.

[Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.]

Grace Moore comes to the screen of the Earle Theater tomorrow in the widely heralded "Love Me Forever," Columbia's bid for a renewal of the favor that was enjoyed by "One Night of Love," last season's sensational hit. In this new subject, which also introduces favorite grand opera arias during the story of the rise of a brilliant young vocalist from obscurity to a place of eminence with the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company, the star is supported by a triumvirate of leading men—Leo Carillo, as the impresario who has come up from the rackets; Michael Bartlett, who plays himself as an operatic tenor, and Robert Allen, the romantic interest. Also prominently cast are Spring Byington and Luis Alberni. The picture ends with almost a full act of Puccini's "La Boheme." The stage bill will be headlined by Cross and Dunn, singing funsters of the N. B. C., and also will include Steve Evans in "Hollywood Snapshots"; the Liboneti Trio, a European novelty, and Billy Wells and the Four Fays in "Soup to Nuts."

Packed with action, tense with vivid drama and not without its element of romance, "Men Without Names," chief feature of the screen bill at Loew's Fox Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, carries on the story of the Department of Justice"s unrelenting war against crime. Foremost in the cast are Fred MacMurray, Lynne Overman, Herbert Rawlinson, Madge Evans and Master David Jack Holt. This particular story deals with what a picturesque vernacular dubs the "snatch racket" and bears many points of resemblance to a recent sensational kidnaping case. The headliners of the stage program will be Frank and Milt Britton and their band, costarred with Grace Hayes—not in the same act, however—celebrated singing star of radio and stage. Other acts will be supplied by Joe May and Louise Troxel, comics, and the Sylvia Mannon Revue Co.

Edgar Allen Poe's poem of "The Raven" supplied the inspiration for the film bearing that name which will occupy the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, with Bela "Dracula" Lugosi and Boris "Frankenstein" Karloff costarred. These two symbols of all that is sinister in thrilling mystery drama are said to have a perfect joint vehicle in this eerie tale of the monster and the vampire. A strong associate cast has been assembled for the stars' support. The bill will be augmented by short sound subjects and a new issue of the Pathe News.

• • • •

"Escapade," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture starring William Powell and introducing Louise Rainer to American audiences, will be continued through a second week at Loew's Palace Theater, beginning tomorrow. Virginia Bruce, Mady Christians, Alison Skipworth, Frank Morgan and Reginald Owen also are importantly cast in roles they find congenial. The supplementary features of the program also will be continued.

• • • •

Richard Dix returns to the local screen at Warner Brothers Metropolitan tomorrow in "The Arizonian," a Western subject, in which he is supported by Margot Grahame, the young blonde actress who made so favorable an impression opposite Victor McLaglen in "The Informer." Others in the cast include Preston Foster, Louis Calhern, James Bush and Joseph Sauers. A Fifi D'Orsay musical subject, "Better Than Gold," a new release in the "See America First" series, "The Yanks Are Coming," and full 15-minute newsreel will complete the bill.

• • • •

Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Charles Ruggles, Edna May Oliver, Franchot Tone and Gail Patrick will renew their downtown run in "No More Ladies" on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater beginning tomorrow. This is the film version of the A. E. Thomas stage hit that recently enjoyed so prosperous an engagement at the Palace. It is one of the comedy hits of the season. The bill will be completed by short-reel subjects and news events.

The current spell of hot and humid weather has driven record-breaking crowds to the cool groves and Crystal Pool of Glen Echo Park. There is an element of refreshment, as a matter of fact, in practically all of the 50-odd devices now operating at midseason speed at the 40-acre, free-admission amusement center. The pool has a capacity of 1,500,000 gallons of filtered water and 3,000 bathers. Dancing is enjoyed every week night in the Spanish Garden Ballroom to the music of McWilliams' 12-piece orchestra.

Beginning next Monday night, the melodrama group of the Roadside Theater will be seen for the first time in "To Die at Dawn," a play new to Washington. It will be presented for two weeks. The Roadside is four miles the other side of Bethesda, Md., out the Rockville pike. Special bus service will be run from Dupont Circle each Friday night, beginning tomorrow. The current bill is "Grand Gesture," modern play.

Hollywords and Paragraphs.

Hollywood, July 11.

WILLIAM ANTHONY McGUIRE, Harold Arlen, Eddie Buzzell, Gus Kahn, Norman Krasna, Lew Brown and Al Lewis were sitting in the den at Eddie Cantor's house. They all took turns telling stories about Seymour Felix. The stories about Felix went on for hours. He is a character of characters.

Felix is a dance director. He is so frail that he has to put weights in his pockets on a windy day. And he is the champion hypochondriac. Of the many yarns told about him that afternoon—several unprintable—there was one that Cantor told which happened while Felix was putting on the dance for the musical comedy, "Whoopee."

Cantor and Florenz Ziegfeld were having lunch in a restaurant during a rehearsal intermission. At another table sat Felix with a group of his chorines. "I'll have Felix running over to this table in a minute," Cantor said to Ziegfeld.

• • • •

Cantor called the waiter and ordered a pitcher of cream and a bottle of charged water. "What are you doing?" asked Ziegfeld. "Felix tries all new medicines . . . just wait."

The waiter brought the order. Cantor mixed the cream and the charged water. He had never tasted the mixture before. He saw Felix looking at him. Cantor drank it, although it tasted like liquid chalk. He had just finished when Felix was at the table. "What's that?" he asked.

"What's that?" Cantor replied. "I wouldn't be without it. It's the thing that saved me. I'm surprised you don't know about it. One drink of this and I'm completely relaxed. I take it to get some sleep. It's the greatest thing for the nerves."

• • • •

FELIX returned to his table. He quickly called the waiter. He ordered two pitchers of cream and two bottles of charged water. He drank them both.

Lunch was over and the entire company of "Whoopee" was on the stage ready for rehearsal. They waited and waited for Seymour Felix, but no Felix. They searched for him, but no Felix. "Call him at the hotel," said Ziegfield. The assistant stage manager phoned Felix at the hotel. He returned with this message: "Felix says that he's tired and he's sleeping. He's so completely relaxed that he won't be able to get up for several hours."

"And to this day," continued Cantor, "Felix thanks me. He drinks charged water and cream every night before going to bed."

"You're not kidding," added Eddie Buzzell. "Felix just put on the dances for a picture I directed and he used to drink that stuff on the set to relax." We were all having a big laugh when Al Lewis said: "I'm Felix' best friend. I'm always with him. He introduced that drink to me. I've been taking it for years. But I changed it to ginger ale and cream. I don't know how I'll sleep tonight."

Bing Crosby keeps a press book of all his adverse reviews in his dressing room. Bing says these notices are great to read just when you're getting a high opinion of yourself. Bing's favorite is the review which begins:

"Crosby gave his usual monotonous performance."

Louise Rainer knows very little English, in fact not much more than the speeches she had to learn for "Escapade." At Metro they have fun teaching her to say words which have another meaning—which is why she is apt to amaze you in conversation.

• • • •

GEORGE S. KAUFMAN, in the cinema town, yarns about what happened backstage at some of his shows. "Let 'em Eat Cake" had opened, received lukewarm reviews and was doing bad business. There was one number in the show in which four lines of chorines, each line wearing dresses of different shades of blue, did a dance routine. After a performance one night, George Gershwin, who wrote the music, summoned the four lines of girls and started to give them instructions.

"Now you girls in the navy blue dresses should come forward more," explained Gershwin. "And you girls in the sky blue dresses should then move upstage and the girls in the light blue dresses should . . ." It was then that Morrie Ryskind, co-author, interrupted with: "You know, George, that isn't really what's the matter with the show!"

The Screen Writers Guild, composed of scenario writers, now select each month, in their magazine, the best screen play and the best performance of all the pictures released during the month. Hikers' Guide to Potomac Trails Will Give Details for 30 Trips

By Robert Shosteck.

Hikers will be glad to learn that the long-awaited guide to the trails and natural history of the upper Potomac will soon be published. It will be a 125-page handbook, with map, to sell for 50 cents. This guide will give details of 30 hikes in this region, describing routes, scenery and telling interesting historical, botanical and geological facts.

Chapters of particular interest to Wanderbirds are those dealing with swimming places, woodland pests, hiking hints, and outdoors groups in Washington. Leading scientists and naturalists have contributed essays on bird life, geology, trees, flowers, fish, etc., of this region. A series of articles on historic places and a large-scale trail map, showing springs, roads, trails, mines, falls, swim places, and elevations, complete this book.

To insure the publication of an adequate first edition, hikers are urged to write to the Wanderbirds, care of The Post, indicating their interest in this handbook and the number of copies they might wish when the book is published. Send no money. Just write in and let us know you're interested!

Sunday's trip to Great Falls, Va., will afford hikers an opportunity to visit some scenic spots along the upper Potomac as well as swim or boat in the placid river above the dam. By special arrangement with the bus company, a short hike of about 4 miles has been arranged for those who do not care to take the complete hike; this shorter trip including all of the attractive features.

Readers of The Washington Post and Wanderbirds planning to go on either hike and also to visit Great Falls, will meet in front of The Post Building at 9:45, boarding buses for the ride to a point above Elkins, where the hike begins. The fare will be 50 cents for the longer hike and 35 cents for the hike which starts near Lockers Branch. Bring along lunch, a swim suit and a cup for water.

The hike begins on the bluff overlooking the old Washington-Old Dominion station and follows a woods road along a stream, down to a foot bridge. Crossing over, we soon strike another road which leads to the now abandoned Hollywood Camp, and the mineral spring, which supplied this camp when it was the popular rendezvous of Washington hikers and naturalists. The trail emerges into a country road which is followed about 100 yards to another trail which starts near a bungalow beside the road.

Following a woodland road, we pass a huge sawdust pile and then another spring, entering the county road a short distance from Lockers Branch. The group taking the shorter trip will meet us at this point. The route from this road to the Potomac side trail follows an old woods road through a mixed hardwoods forest. We reach the river at a point opposite Clagett Island, continuing eastward to the mouth of Lockers Run, a good place for swimming. Hikers, however, are advised to swim along the river bank near Conn Island, a point near the end of the hike.

An old road follows Lockers Branch for one-half mile and turns left to the county road. We retrace our steps a short distance and continue along a dirt road to Trammel's Boathouse on the river. There are several fine springs nearby, and members of our party may swim or hire a rowboat at a reasonable rental.

An easy trail parallels the Potomac past the dam to Great Falls, at which point the hikers can view the cataract and inspect the old George Washington Canal, as well as the mill and foundry ruins. The buses will await the group on the road above the railway station. We should return to the city by 7 p. m.

Hikers are again reminded that tickets for the trip to Berkeley Springs, W. Va., must be bought in advance and are on sale at the Post at $2.50 each. Only a limited number (two bus loads) can be accommodated, so buy yours early! This is a trip that you can not afford to miss, so watch for the write-up next Friday.

The chigger season approaches and hikers are advised to take the simple precaution of dusting with flowers of sulphur to keep these pests away. Just dust your ankles and legs and you won't be troubled.

Personal: If the young man in the 1929 coupe who held up traffic last night at 14th st. and Mass. Ave. N. W. will consult Post Want Ads today he will find a car advertised at the price he wants to pay and he'll be able to get home on time in the future.

Md. Judge Dies While Hearing Case in Court

Judge Dallas, Prominent in Wicomico County, Heart Attack Victim.

By the Associated Press.

Salisbury, Md., July 11.—Judge David Dallas, who had held office as judge of the people's court here for only two months, was stricken by a heart attack and died almost instantly while hearing a case in court today.

In the midst of testimony by a defendant in a drunken driving case, the jurist suddenly placed his hand to his head and said "stop" in a weak voice. Then, with the words "call Bob," Judge Dallas collapsed.

His son, Robert Dallas, and Dr. J. McF. Dick, who had been summoned by court attendants, arrived a few moments later. Dr. Dick pronounced the jurist dead.

Judge Dallas, three times president of the Salisbury Chamber of Commerce and former treasurer of the Wicomico County FERA Board, was one of the most prominent citizens in the county. He moved here from Ardmore, Pa., in 1919 and was a leader in civic, religious and welfare work.

He was one of the organizers of the Wicomico Welfare Association and served as secretary-treasurer until the association was supplanted by the FERA board.

He was appointed to the bench by Gov. Harry W. Nice and succeeded Judge S. King White on May 6.

Prominent in Masonry.

For the last 12 years Judge Dallas was senior warden of St. Peter's Episcopal Church and was active in the work of the parish.

He took great interest in fraternal organizations, was a past grand Tall Cedar of the Eastern Shore Forest, Tall Cedars of Lebanon, a membeer of the Shrine, former president of the Salisbury Rotary Club, and was a life member of the Elks Lodge of Norristown, Pa.

He is survived by his wife, four sons—David, Harry, Robert and George—and a daughter Mrs. Filbert Hitch, Seaford, Del.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 11.—Burns suffered two weeks ago in a midnight fire which destroyed his home, along with several others in this city, proved fatal to Amos Luther Martin, 58, yesterday at a local hospital. The fire is thought to have originated from an oil stove in the Martin home. He came here from Shenandoah City, Page County, Va., 35 years ago. Surviving are his wife and four sons, all of this city.

Mrs. Ella Jane Southard.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Beaten by Wife, He Gets Decree

Mechanic Alleges Children Held Him While Mate Wielded Fists.

Fillmore C. King, 43-year-old Montgomery County automobile mechanic, who charged that his wife beat him so badly, he suffered "nervous breakdowns and spasms," was awarded a final decree in divorce proceedings in the Circuit Court at Rockville, Md., yesterday. The suit was uncontested.

Judge Charles W. Woodward handed down the decision after examining a deposition in which King accused his wife, Mrs. Emma J. King, of Gaithersburg, of getting their children to hold her husband while she beat him.

King, who lives at Damascus, said that his wife beat him "so many times I never kept account of them."

He said that in addition to attacking him with her fists she also threw dishes at him and on one occasion shattered "four or five plates, five or six saucers and two or three cups." He said he never attempted to strike back.

The Kings were married in Frederick on August 10, 1907 and separated on October 13, 1929, when he decided he could no longer stand her "cruel and inhuman" treatment.

They have four children, two of whom are married. The other two live with their mother.

County to Seek a Settlement Of Row With Health Boards

Committee Named to Ask for Return of Fund Withdrawn.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 1111 Oak Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone Shepherd 2363.

Reestablishment of amicable relations with the United States Public Health Service and the Maryland State Board of Health will be sought by the Montgomery County Commissioners.

County Commissioner Paul M. Coughlan and Charles E. King were appointed a committee to confer with the Federal and State bodies in an eort to obtain the return of $1,500 in appropriations which were withdrawn, when Lawrence Tolson was appointed sanitary inspector for the country despite the protests of the health services.

The Federal and State bodies held that Tolson was not qualified for the position since he had not graduated as a sanitary engineer. The Fusion county commissioners insisted on his appointment, however.

Commissioner King was largely instrumental in the appointment of Tolson and has defended him since. Tolson is a Fusion Democrat.

A delegation headed by H. Albert Buehler, Silver Spring, president of the Independent Retail Grocers Association of the county, appeared before the board to urge immediate enforcement of the huckster license law. The law was passed at the last session of the State Legislature and became effective July 1. It requires a license fee of $100 and provides restrictions on the sale by hucksters or peddlers of goods on county streets and highways. No action was taken by the commissioners pending a further study of the measure.

At the recommendation of Dr. V. L. Ellicott, county health officer, the commissioners authorized the health department to charge a special fee for inspecting milk and cream produced in dairies outside of Montgomery County where local inspection is not provided, if the products are sold in the county. The fee will not be charged to dairies in Washington where regular inspections are made.

Two appointments were made by the board and one dismissal ordered. Clifford Morrison, clerk at the Bethesda liquor dispensary, was transfered to the post of desk clerk at the Silver Spring police station where he displaces Kelley Magee, who was dismissed. Morrison's former post at the dispensary will be filled by Robert Briggs, of Gaithersburg.

Announcement was made that the board will meet on Tuesday of each week only during July and August. Thursday meetings will be held only on special call.

The first arrests under the new coal act passed by the last session of the State Legislature were made in the county yesterday when David Pearlman and Charles Wyche, both of Frederick, were arrested in Gaithersburg on a charge of selling coal without a certificate of weight.

The two men pleaded ignorance of the law and were fined $25 each by Judge Harold C. Smith, of the Rockville Police Court. Sentence was suspended, however, and officers were detailed to see that the two truck loads of coal were returned to Fredericik.

The coal law forbids bringing coal into the county without weighing in the county and the name and address of the seller, the date of the sale and the name and address of the weigher being registered and the information given to the customer.

Postal officials are considering several lots in Bethesda as possible sites for a new post office in that town, it was revealed yesterday. Properties are on or near Wisconsin avenue in the business district between Leland street and Old Georgetown road.

At the same time it was learned that a similar survey is being made along Georgia avenue in Silver Spring looking to a new post office for that town.

Forms have been sent out to prospective sellers inviting bids on lots thought desirable by the post office.

Improvements shown in the products of the majority of Montgomery County dairies will result in the announcement of new milk grades on Monday, it was announced yesterday by Dr. V. L. Ellicott, county health officer.

Dr. Ellicott declared that, while a few must accept a lower mark, the majority of dairies serving milk in the county have shown great improvement in the last few months and will receive a higher grade.

Between 15 and 20 dairies recently have discontinued operations or will discontinue within the next few days, the health officer declared. He said that there are 150 dairies under county inspection. Ninety-four of these are farms shipping to pasteurization plants; 30 are dairymen retailing raw milk; 23 are farms selling raw milk and cream at farm markets and 3 are institutions having their own dairies.

Miss Adelene Pratt, chairman of the Maryland public library commission, will visit three Montgomery County libraries today. She will outline a system for the newly formed Takoma Park (Md.) Library Association headed by Mrs. Frederick L. Pratt, this morning.

Local problems will be discussed at the Bethesda and Silver Spring libraries with Miss Pratt this afternoon and tonight. A central library in Montgomery County, preferably in Rockville, Md., is one of the chief subjects.

After her session in Takoma Park, Miss Pratt will be honor guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. Pratt in her home. The guests will be Col. and Mrs. A. L. Conger, Mrs. Jame Robertson and Mrs. Edmund H. Graham, all members of the library staff.

The petition of Alfred Z. Frizzell, of Glen Echo Heights, Md., for the rezoning of three lots from residential to commercial will be heard by the Montgomery County commissioners at the Bethesda County Building Monday at 7 p. m. The change is opposed by the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The first meeting of the board of directors of the Silver Spring Lions Club under the presidency of E. Francis McDevitt, will be held tonight at 8 o'clock at his home, 17 Sunnyside road, Sligo Park Hills, Md. Plans for a charter night celebration in August will be made.

Plans for the dedication of the new Glen Echo firehouse July 20 are proceeding satisfactorily, it was announced by Mayor Henry T. McCuen, of Glen Echo, following a joint meeting of committees of the fire board and the Ladies Auxiliary last night.

Reports were submitted by Dr. W. M. Gamble, general chairman; Mrs. Fannie Orendorff, chairman of the auxiliary; Edward Fagan, chairman of events; Max Arnold, decorations and refreshments; Clarence W. Sands, program, and Daniel T. Etzler, tickets, for the dance to follow the dedication.

A kitchen shower will be held at 8 o'clock tonight for the benefit of the new building.

Fire yesterday afternoon destroyed a shed in the rear of property at 8706 Georgia avenue, Silver Spring, Md. The blaze was started from a defective coal stove used for cooking by two men who were said to be living in the shed. The men were away at the time the blaze was discovered. Damage was estimated at $50.

Civic League Sponsors Rally For Candidates

Six to Address Gathering at Fort Myer Heights Hall Tonight.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

The Rosslyn Precinct Civic League is sponsoring a political rally tonight in the Woodrow Wilson School at Fort Myer Heights. Several Democratic candidates for nomination to county offices in the prmary election next month will speak.

Candidates scheduled to address the gathering include Sheriff Howard B. Fields and H. J. Odenthal, candidates for sheriff; Lyman M. Kelly, Ralph E. Remington, C. B. Laycock and I. C. Buchanan, candidates for county clerk.

The semi-monthly meeting of the Arlington County Board will be held tomorrow morning in the courthouse.

Reports that the sale of watered milk and milk products have been so widely circulated that the county health officials are planning to submit an ordinance forbidding the sale of adulterated milk.

It is reported that such an ordinance would require all persons or companies selling or distributing milk to obtain a county license or permit. Such permit would be issued for one year and could be revoked at any time by the county health officer for violation of the ordinance.

Milk, milk products and pasteurization will be defined. It also regulates inspection of dairy farms and milk plants. The grading, labeling, distribution and sale of milk products will be rigidly supervised.

The health officer would be authorized to collect samples for laboratory inspection and to determine the quality of milk. Violation of the ordinance would be a misdemeanor and subject the owner to loss of the permit.

Delaware Man Claims Sail-Plane Record

Elmira, N. Y., July 11 (AP).—Richard C. du Pont, of Wilmington, Del., was credited with the longest flight made to date at the sixth annual national soaring contests here today when he piloted his sail plane to West Franklin, Pa., approximately 30 miles by air.

He soared at an altitude of between 6,000 and 7,000 feet and may have broken the national record of 6,224 feet, which he himself made last year. His official altitude today will not be known until his barograph has been calibrated.

James Roosevelt Named To Head Yeast Concern

New York, July 11 (AP).—President Roosevelt's eldest son, James, has been elected president of the National Grain Yeast Co., of Belleville, N. J., it became known today.

The tall, husky son of the Chief Executive, who has been engaged in the insurance business, said he liked his new job "very well."

Board Insists Alexandria Fix Or Build Jail

Quarterly Report Completed by Commissioners Calls for Prompt Action.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The quarterly report of the jail commissioners, which is to be submitted to city council, makes several recommendations which are listed as "imperative," and states: "From time to time, following a careful inspection, your commissioners have recommended necessary changes and improvements to the jail, but as yet nothing has been done. It is mockery for the judge of the corporation court constantly to appoint commissioners, and a waste of our time to make the inspections and recommendations unless changes and repairs are to be made."

The commissioners then recommend that "necessary changes and improvement be made so as to make us justly proud of our jail, or that the old jail may be completely demolished and a new, bigger and modern one built with PWA money. Fairfax and Arlington have done it. Why not Alexandria?"

The principal recommendations are:

That refrigeration of some description be installed.

Better quarters for white women be provided.

More light and ventilation be provided by more windows, and painting the inside of the building aluminum.

A dormitory be erected to house the chain gang and colored women.

Each prisoner undergo a thorough examination by the city health officer and those with infectious diseases be given careful treatment and segregated.

That iron bars be set up at all windows and that the entire structure be made fireproof, and that the building as a whole be given a coat of paint.

That better quarters be provided for the office personnel, with more and better equipment, offering privacy to officers.

The report concludes with this statement: "In view of inadequate facilities and in the face of serious odds under which the jail officers labor, and for the splendid shape in which we find conditions at the jail, we desire to express our hearty approval and thanks to Sergt R. H. Cox and his worthy assistants."

The jail commissioners are: The Rev. Pierce S. Ellis, chairman; S. K. Brown and Dr. W. Clyde West.

Mayor E. C. Davison stated last night that city council has in mind a project for improvement of the conditions complained of, but that he is not in favor of "turning the jail into a summer resort." The council has every intention of correcting any insanitary conditions that may exist, he said, and the report of the commissioners will be given due consideration when submitted to the council.

Merit badges for safe driving of automobiles were presented to seven employes of the Alexandria Gas Co. at the first annual breakfast meeting of the company in the George Mason Hotel yesterday.

Mayor E. C. Davison was the principal speaker, and he urged that Alexandria be made "the safest city in America for pedestrians and autoists." He congratulated the honored drivers, and the officials of the gas company for their initiative in inaugurating this movement. Ray C. Brehaut, general manager of the company, presided.

Police Capt. John S. Arnold, a member of the Alexandria traffic board, presented the awards to William Miller, 1 year, 5,000 miles; A. E. George, 1 year, 5,000 miles; William Smith, 1 year, 5,000 miles; Robert A. Bowman, 1 year, 8,000 miles; Edward Gentry, 3 years, 30,000 miles; H. D. Respess, 4 years, 37,000 miles; Ralph Phillips, 4 years, 32,000 miles, and Ray C. Brehaut, 4 years, 63,000 miles, none of which had an accident in the time specified.

Talks were also made by Clarence J. Robinson, president of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce; T. B. Hooper, general superintendent of the Washington Gas Co.; H. L. Leonard, safety engineer, and others.

The new officers of Liberty Rebekah Lodge, No. 16, Odd Fellows, have been installed by Mrs. Elizabeth Mudd, district deputy president, and staff. The officers installed were Vaughan Hutcherson, noble grand; Rose E. Higgs, vice grand; Marvin Hudson, recording secretary; Josephine Gaines, financial secretary; Bessie Kringler, treasurer; Annie Henry, chaplain; Flora Reynolds, right supporter to noble grand; Mary Priest, left supporter to noble grand; Bertha A. Creel, warden; Mary A. Lucas, conductor; Marie B. Mill-, inside guardian; Ione Duncan, outside guardian; Mrs. Elmore Mudd, musician; Arline Wakeman, right supporter to vice grand, and Dora Sult, left supporter to vice grand.

The annual life saving campaign sponsored by the Alexandria Chapter of the American Red Cross will be staged at the Alexandria municipal swimming pool within the next few days. All boys and girls desiring to take the junior or senior life saving courses have been urged to sign up as soon as possible. Preliminary instructions and final tests will be conducted by Dave Henderson and Frank Backus, Red Cross examiners.

State Begins Work On Colesville Pike

Road Project Will Take 3 Months to Complete.

Widening of Colesville pike in Silver Spring, Md., from Georgia avenue to Franklin avenue, a distance of 1.12 miles, was begun yesterday by the State roads commission. The project also includes the construction of sidewalks on both sides of the roadway.

The road, which is heavily traveled, is one of the main arteries from Washington to Baltimore. The present 20-foot roadway will be widened to 56 feet with a 30-foot concrete strip in the center and two 13-foot macadam lanes on either side. A 4-foot sidewalk is to be built on each side of the pike, while the bridge over Sligo Creek will be widened to 70 feet.

It is expected the project, which has been sought for some time by local civic associations, will require three months to complete.

D.C. Women Are Visiting In Vermont

Mrs. Wilson and the Two Mrs. Jones to Join Mrs. Covington.

Trip to Summer Home Will Reunite a D. C. Social Foursome.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

There is a group of distinguished women in Washington who are not only active in the social life but who find time to do many other interesting things. They who very frequently play bridge together are Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. J. Harry Covington, wife of the distinguished lawyer; Mrs. Jesse H. Jones, wife of the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Mrs. Bernard B. Jones, wife of the owner of the famous Audley Farms Stables.

Mrs. Covington left Washington several weeks ago for her summer home, Minden Cottage, at Craftsbury, Vt., where she is established for the remainder of the season. Judge Covington will join her there for brief holidays during the summer. And yesterday Mrs. Wilson and the two Mrs. Jones left to visit Mrs. Covington for the week-end, during which time they will doubtless make up their bridge foursome. Another person who frequently plays with them is Mrs. William E. Borah, wife of Senator Borah, who did not accompany them on the trip, since she is preparing to leave within a few days for the West, probably via the Panama Canal to the West Coast, and thence to Boise, Idaho.

Mrs. Wilson Keeps Home Open.

Mrs. Wilson has not made any definite plans for the summer, and her home on S street, where she and the former President lived from the time of his retirement from office until his death, is still open, and the former First Lady is enjoying short visits with her friends.

Mrs. Jesse Jones is lingering in the Capital with her husband, who is among the busiest of the New Dealers, and is also making only brief trips out of town.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Jones have closed their home on Wyoming avenue and are established at their country home, Audley Farms, near Berryville, Va. It is on this farm, with its quaint old brick house, once the home of Nellie Custis, that Mr. Jones spends much time the year 'round. Audley is the stud farm for the fine string of race horses. The rolling acres are dotted with green paddocks, and lined with white fences. The house itself, which is not large, stands a short distance from the extensive stables in a grove of tall trees, and is almost hidden by the ancient box bushes.

Borah's Mount From There.

Inside are large comfortable rooms, and one room, which Mr. Jones calls his office, is devoted to books on race horses, pictures of some of the famous Audley runners, and trophies of their victories. It was from Audley Farm that Al Smith, the favorite mount of Senator Borah came. A gift of Mr. Jones to the Senator, Al Smith held the spotlight for several years, until a year ago, when he was disabled. But into his sphere some three years ago came Mary Borah, who trotted into the paddock to be introduced to the world by a name as significant as his own. The beautiful filly of Princess Doreen and Bright Knight was named for the petite wife of the Senator and was in the spotlight even after Al Smith had graciously retired.

It is a rare treat to be invited to Audley, not only to partake of the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Jones but to see the horses, of which there are several hundred. And Mr. Jones knows each colt by name, as well as the full-fledged race horses, and the young ones seem especially attached to their owner, for at his call they come to the fences.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones usually spend July at Audley, and with the opening of the racing season at Saratoga on August 1 are in their box every day to watch the Audley string do credit to their name.

Men's Traditional Devotion to Grays Yielding to Color, With Ties Leading the Revolt

This BUSINESS of LIVING

How to Regain Mental Poise Is Problem of Girl Who Has Known Tragedy.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Please print my letter. You have given so much good advice to so many persons that I am writing to you to help me. I'll begin at what I believe is the beginning, so that you may fully understand my situation.

My father, who had always been considered a well-to-do man, died when I was very small. Due to poor investments, he left his family just nothing. The years following were unbelievable misery. We lived on charities and the grudging kindness of relatives. Mother became ill and was in bed for nine long weary years. With looking after mother, trying to keep house and going to school when I could, I had no opportunity to make any friends. I had only one dress when I went to school, which was a black one I had made myself from one of mothers. I wore boy's shoes. The other children made fun of my appearance. Naturally I grew up lonely, very shy and supersensitive.

• • • •

Our diet, of course, was very faulty. Often for weeks we could have only bread to eat and not enough of that. Because of this, we children all developed serious cases of acne. It lasted for years. Mine was the worst and it is only during the last two years that it has disappeared; but it has left my face scarred and marred.

• • • •

At the age of 15 I secured a special permit to work in a factory during summer vacations. The hours were from 7 o'clock in the morning to 6 in the evening, with a half hour for lunch. I stood at the work bench all day. During school sessions I coached children in the lower grades, minded babies for other people, sold candy after hours and worked in a 10-cent store on Saturdays from 8:30 in the morning until 10 at night. However, I was determined to finish high school, which I did, graduating in 1929 with second highest honors in my class. A little later I secured a position in another town and went away. When my brothers married, my mother came to live with me and is entirely dependent upon me.

• • • •

Last fall mother and I came to Washington where I had found employment. Because of my shyness and sensitivity, I have made only one friend since I have been here. This is a young man whom I have learned to care for very deeply. I thought he cared, too, until a few months ago when he told me he had at last met "the girl of my dreams." Those are his own words. It seems she is everything I am not. She is charmingly educated, accomplished, beautiful and comes of a wealthy family of fine social standing. The young man is a lawyer of equal social standing.

• • • •

Since then I have seen very little of him. I have simply cracked up. I have lost my perspective and my faith in the future. My work suffered as a result and I have lost my position. It is useless to suppose I could ever win him back. The odds are too great, I know that. But I must forget him. I must regain my mental balance and poise. What can I do to relieve the ache in my heart? Please tell me what to do.

• • • •

There is no one in this whole wide world I can turn to now. Mother's health is too delicate and uncertain and she must be guarded from worry. I can never tell her my troubles and worries. She does not know I have lost my position. I must get another immediately, but I am so depressed I fail to make a favorable impression during an interview. I am so lonely; oh, so lonely. Surely there can be no more dregs left in my glass.

Isn't there some one who can help me? I am so desperately in need of a friend. LOST.

Whom to Consult—

DEAR LOST: The ideal person to help you is, in my opinion, Miss Beulah Smith, director of the Washington Life Adjustment Center, which is the adult clinic of the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene. Her telephone number is ADams 7979 and she is waiting to hear from you.

When I discussed your problems with her, Miss Smith said the clinic has found it possible to help others in similar situations, some of whom were even further gone in despair than you are.

• • • •

The thing you urgently need just now is psychiatric guidance in making a new and more adequate social adjustment than you were able to achieve in the past through your own unguided efforts. Until you met this man, it is entirely probably you concentrated entirely on professional progress and failed entirely to develop a technique of meeting other persons in their own fields of interest. You must develop courage and initiative in going the more-than-half-way so necessary to making friends in a new environment.

• • • •

Because Miss Smith can and will put you in touch with the ablest psychiatrists in Washington, who serve the clinic without fee, and who can give you the advice and help you need in this crisis, it seems unnecessary for me to duplicate their suggestions with any of my own. I shall confine my advice to this: Don't hesitate a moment in calling Miss Smith, ADams 7979, and making an early appointment.

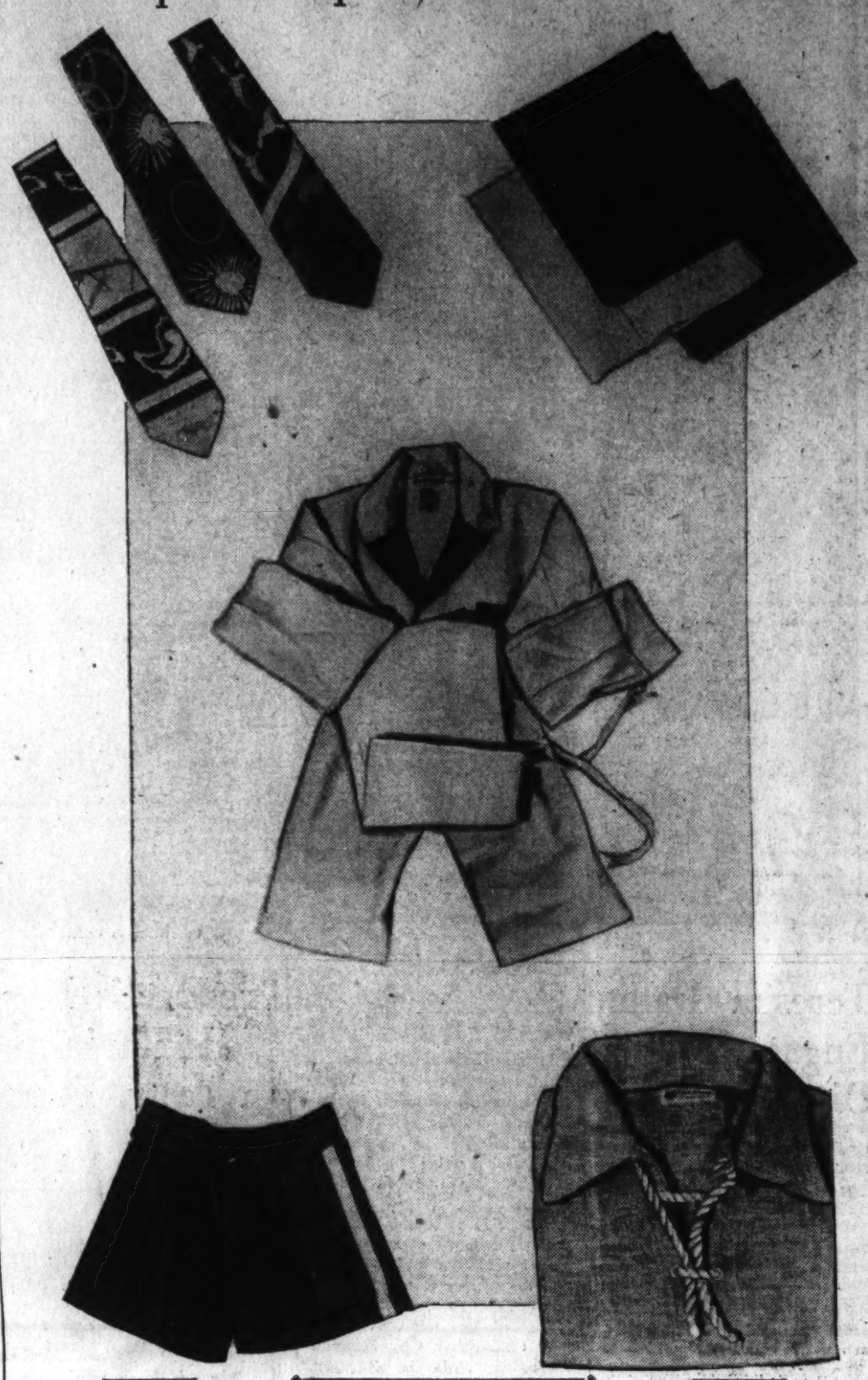
Hand-Painted, But Not Pictorial, Cravats Will Impart Proper Dash to White Shirts



Shorts Gaining Favor for Sports Wear; Cool Pajamas for $1.95.

By John Q. Alexander.

SINCE BECKY SHARP burst upon us in all her technicolored glory, something has happened to men's wear. Staid gentlemen who have been devoted to dull grays for years suddenly are bouncing around in reds, oranges, greens and other audible hues. Shades of Joseph and his coat of many colors!

Color's a swell idea, but should be handled with care. There's no sense in dressing to match Old Harriet, our favorite mount on the carousel at Glen Echo—bless her! What we mean is, it's all right in its place, but be careful where you put it.

Used with discrimination, color can go a long way toward giving you What It Takes. For instance, let yourself go on ties. In this respect, we saw some really elegant ones yesterday. Rampant with color, cheerful as a Salvation Army lass and probably much more fun to have around your neck. And, so help us, hand painted! By hand painted, we don't mean they have pictures of the Capitol Dome, "Souvenir of Lake Waramaug" or "Johnnie Loves Dottie" on them. They're a sort of batik effect, and the color combinations are in good taste with the exception of a few where the artist fought hard against loud oranges and bilious greens and lost.

Smart But Genteel.

The designs are smart and unusual and exactly right for summer wear with light suits of white or plain colors. We saw something like them in New York last year and they were so expensive there that you could have knocked us over with a bubble when we discovered these were only $2.00. They are made of crepe silk, don't wrinkle easily and have the virtue of being unusual without being obvious.

Another thing which has heeded the call to colors is handkerchiefs. They may be had in wine, browns, blues, greens, yellows—in fact in almost any color you like, all plain and solid looking, of fine linen. These would be especially good with sports clothes. Be sure they don't clash with your shirt and tie, and don't wear them to the office unless you have on a white suit. An admirable breast pocket addition to your summer wardrobe. Fifty cents each.

• • • •

WE DON'T KNOW how to explain it, but men seem suddenly to have stopped being bashful and have taken to wearing shorts for tennis, golf, hiking and comfort. There are ten pairs of masculine legs visible this year for every one pair on view last season, and the swing back to short pants is gaining momentum every day.

You can get these in linen, gabardine or khaki, the last being preferred for rough stuff like camping and boating. The ones we liked best were of navy blue linen, with a small front pocket for cigarettes and money, a hip pocket for your handkerchief. Plenty of pleats, but not too many, for free action, and a narrow yellow and black streamline down the sides. The same type in maroon gabardine was just as good, with a half-inch white stripe. These have wide waist bands and narrow belts just across your middle . . . not all the way 'round. You've got to furnish your own belt with the khaki shorts, which come only in regular khaki color.

Any or all of them are yours, for $2.00 each. Sports shorts should be worn fairly long—to about three or four inches above your knees, and light woolen golf socks go well with them. They're one of the most welcome inhovations for keeping you air-cooled we've seen.

Rabbits' Fur for Polo.

This same store has an enormous assortment of polo shirts, ranging in price from $1 to $1.95. They're available in linen, cotton mesh, terry cloth, dish-rag and other fabrics, in various colors. A particularly good looking and practical one is of a knit rabbit's fur material, dark gray with horizontal narrow blue and white stripes. Open collar, of course, and a breast pocket. If you haven't yet discovered the comfort of polo shirts, you're missing something. This one is $1.95.

And, speaking of the same, our idea of the pinnacle of informal elegance is the new Normandie polo or sports shirt. It's right off the boat, made of coarse natural linen, which is a soft sand color, and will set you back $3.50. Take your pick of the collar arrangement, but we would advise the rope affair illustrated as the smartest of the lot.

• • • •

SLEEP TIGHT DEPARTMENT: If you've been tossing about like a lost balloon these hot nights, you're just the man we're looking for. We've discovered a pair of pajamas so light and cool that from now on it's going to be January in July instead of June in January, and you can give up counting sheep altogether. They are made of cucumber crepe, so thin that you can almost see through them, as if that made any difference.

Take our word for it, these pajamas will lie as lightly on you as your mother-in-law's troubles. They are smartly tailored in both slip-over and button styles, trimmed in plaid. Available in iceberg white, lemon yellow and two cool shades of blue. Oh, and there's another good point, that the little woman will appreciate. They never should be ironed. They cost $1.95 a pair.

• • • •

JUST ONE MORE thing. If you are one of those harassed souls who is always being bothered by his tie blowing into his face or over his shoulder or generally getting out of place, better times can be yours for 50 cents or $1. Get yourself one of those new cravat bars we saw yesterday.

A really good one has come along after all these years. It consists of a very narrow band of metal across your tie, with a tiny chain fastening the band to a holder which clips on to your shirt. The chain is free and invisible, slipping back and forth in its own little groove, giving your tie a certain amount of free play, but keeping it flat and in place. And it won't curl your tie.

Remember to shine your shoes!

Artist's Tribute Well-Meant, But It's a Shocking Reminder Of U. S. Women's Adolescence

By Malvina Lindsay.
Women's Page Editor.

DOUGLAS CHANDOR, British portrait painter, compliments American women on their "extraordinary youngness of mind." It is a well-meant tribute, but, alas, also a disturbing reminder that we are still a Nation of Mrs. Peter Pans.

• • • •

Youngness of mind on one side of the ledger—undoubtedly the side Mr. Chandor is speaking of—means vigor, freshness, enthusiasm, faith. But on the other side it means the expression of many of the most unpleasant attributes of modern womanhood. Worse still, it means a perennial adolescence that is causing too many women to fiddle while Rome burns.

• • • •

It means for one thing a pathetic holding on to the little-girl attitude toward life. Ever since youth became the dominant style motif, women have been afraid to pass the age of 16 mentally as well as physically. As a result, the ingenue, the dullard, the nitwit have been glorified socially. In a world in which the crying need is for maturity of thought, a premium has been set upon feminine cuteness and irresponsibility.

YOUNGNESS of mind means for another thing the development of the feminine martyr. It means the reacting to external events in terms of "I" and "me," the crying aloud when the shoe pinches. It means poor sportsmanship both in bridge and in life.

• • • •

It also means the exhibition of superficial culture, the feverish pursuit of the cult of smartness. It means the lack of independent thinking, the youthful fear of "being different." It means herd viewpoint and herd action.

• • • •

Worst of all, it means seeking escape from public responsibility. It means saying "I'm just a little homebody, my place is at the cocktail party not the study club." Or "My first duty is to my family; I can't be bothered about Ethiopia." It means regarding currency, taxes and unemployment as deep, mysterious subjects a woman can't understand. It means voting for the party or candidate one's father, one's husband or one's set is for, and blandly repeating at teas catchy phrases of newsreel orators. It means mildly hoping there won't be another war and wishing "the men" would do something to stop it.

COMMENCEMENT orators recently have been emphasizing that the great need of the Nation was to grow up. Its period of youthful adventure and pioneering is over. Its frontiers are exhausted. It is an adult Nation facing adult problems. Women no more than men can hide their heads from them.

• • • •

In a call for a feminine brain trust made last week at the University of Virginia Institute of Public Affairs, Mrs. William Dick Sporburg, of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, listed some of the public tasks challenging women. One was the remedy of the crime situation; another, the employment of youth; another, the investigation of propaganda, and still another, the solution of social problems. To these might well be added the abolition of the spoils system and the promotion of world peace.

• • • •

Probably we shall always have with us the spectacle of the big, beaming backslapper, of whom everyone says fondly, "he's just a big boy at heart." But after all, kiddishness is a part of men's heritage—a big feature of their charm. However, it is not a part of the feminine tradition, and women who essay it are always slightly ridiculous. Woman is most herself as the mother of the human race, the adjuster of life's difficulties, the leavener of its miseries. For such a role she must cultivate maturity of mind and spirit.

A rose reception will be given by the Portland, Oreg., branch on the opening Sunday afternoon. The British Columbia branch will be hostesses to the convention body when it makes a boat trip across Puget Sound to the capital of the province Saturday.

Pen League Admits 42.

Relief Corps Meeting Set.

The next meeting of the Lincoln Woman's Relief Corps, No. 6, will be held August 5, when the club resumes its fall activities. The meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Mary G. Pinnock, the president.

What TODAY Means

"Cancer."

IF JULY 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

Conditions conducive to arousing the spirit of cupidity in people of a naturally grasping disposition, makes it advisable for you to be on your guard, should you be thrown into close contact with any of them this day. Penurious practices in business probably will prove to be a grave mistake, indirectly causing monetary losses. Do not be afraid to spend money freely in a good cause, as your liberality may be well rewarded when you least expect it.

Do not attend any social gathering unless you feel that you can freely enter into the spirit of good fellowship, as well as do your part to help the general gayety that is likely to prevail. A kill-joy will only gain unpopularity, and be regarded as an undesirable addition to the circle of amusement seekers. Married and engaged couples and those whose hearts are fluttering with emotions of love, will show wisdom if they display only good-humored toleration, should they be subjected to any form of tantalization on this date.

If a woman and July 12 is your birthday your greatest gift is probably the ability to make yourself attractive. You possess a tremendous amount of personal magnetism, and if you have not developed it to the fullest extent, do so. Do not, however, assume mannerisms, or artificial postures, as they will detract from your natural charm. If you make it a point to be nice to everyone, regardless of class distinction, there will be no limitation to your popularity.

Proper Habits Should Begin Early in Life

Adherence by Adults Viewed by Scientists as Highly Important.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

A GROUP of well known research workers have recently studied the behavior of the colon in more than a thousand college students. The data obtained confirms in a positive way many of our previous notions of the effects of constipation on general health, particularly the minor symptoms characterized as "below par."

It is well known that regular habits begun in childhood and persisted in throughout life are of great importance in avoiding constipation.

The influence of various types of food was noted. More than half named foods that would cause diarrhea, and about one-fourth of the number stated that certain foods induced constipation. Among the constipating foods listed were cheese, meat, candy, peanuts, and starches. Food causing frequency were chiefly fruits such as prunes, apples, figs, and oranges in the order named, although milk, spinach, bran, corn, hot cereal, and coffee were also included. Of the individual substances named that caused diarrhea milk appeared to rank first although it is known that with many people milk is listed as one of the constipating foods.

One-third of the males and two-fifths of the females reported that they had never taken cathartics. An additional number indicated that cathartics were used only once or twice a year, and none of the males and only 7 per cent of the females used cathartics oftener than once a week.

Because of the many factors involved in vacations—changes of diet and water, and irregularity of eating and sleeping habits, constipation increased during this period.

Tests Show Influence of Various Types of Food on Health.

In more than half the males and nearly half the females symptoms varying from mental dullness with headache and abdominal distress were noted if the call to stool was not answered with reasonable promptness.

The entire study is of the greatest interest as indicating the importance of inculcating proper habits in childhood and the strict adherence to those habits in adult life. It is perfectly obvious that any form of cathartic will upset the normal physiology of the intestinal tract. The substance either draws water from the blood and the tissues, excreting it into the bowel, or acts as an irritant on the intestinal mucous membrane.

Engineer Students Decreasing in U. S.

Enrollment in engineering and architectural courses in colleges and universities has declined from 25 to 35 per cent in the last five years, according to the bulletin of the American Association of College Registrars. This has been due to lack of employment in these fields. Enrollment in medical courses has increased.

The engineering profession is reported harder hit by the depression than any other.

Clubwoman Deplores Numerous 'Left-Handed' Kitchens in Washington's Residences

After a long study of kitchens both in the United States and abroad, Mrs. Eugene R. Woodson designed the one shown above for her home at 3245 Klingle road. Stove and refrigerator are in an inclosed porch off the kitchen. A paneled mirror adds spaciousness to the compact space. Cabinets are within easy reach.

Harris & Ewing.
MRS. EUGENE R. WOODSON.

Today's Informal Living Demands Utility, Beauty in Culinary Room.

By Sara Roberts Millhouse.

"WASHINGTON is full of left-handed kitchens with much unused space, too few cupboards, poor equipment, cracked enamel table tops and unsanitary conditions. Something should be done about it"

At her attractive home, 3245 Klingle road, Mrs. Eugene R. Woodson, clubwoman, whose hobby of kitchen planning and designing has made her a sort of kitchen efficiency expert, thus launched a discussion of kitchens and how they may be improved. Her own handsome kitchen is effective expression of her ideas. It has been shown in magazines and advertisements as exemplary of the beauty and utility which may be accomplished in kitchen remodeling.

Women in Washington need to become more kitchen conscious, is Mrs. Woodson's belief.

"It's woman's right not to be degraded by conditions that make her despondent," she exclaimed. There should be a realization that the kitchen has come into a new estate with informal living bringing it practically to the front door. Nowadays, guests, where the hostess has no servants, rush immediately to the kitchen with cries of 'Oh let me help you!' But this gesture, while appreciated, is embarrassing to most hostesses. There is no room for helpful guests in Washington's left-handed kitchens. And the appearance of most kitchens is hardly inviting.

Kitchen Should Be Pleasing.

"Yet the kitchen should be one of the most pleasing, certainly the most efficient room in the house. It should be a welcoming, pleasantly practical place—scene of drink mixing, midnight suppers, ice box raids, informal snacks and kitchen parties. Its usefulness and bright colors should match its new popularity. Young people, in particular, should find it inviting."

But how bring Washington kitchens into this new estate?

"I can best tell you, perhaps, by showing you how I believe I have done it," said Mrs. Woodson, leading the way to the fourth kitchen she has remodeled in her fourth home. It was truly inviting with its bright efficiency, gleaming metal sinks, metal drains, metal topped cupboards, soft ivory and green of woodwork and walls, handy cupboards in every available inch of space.

"Every kitchen can have a fresh attractiveness," she continued. "So much can be done with a few cans of paint and colorful material such as checked gingham. But more important than color is arrangement. Every unsightly apartment kitchen could be made less unsightly by adding more cupboards, filling the gaps of unused space. Ventilating fans are important and so is moving the stove away from the door."

Use of Space Is Important.

The amount of space isn't so important if it is well used and well ventilated insists Mrs. Woodson. Every inch of space should be claimed with cabinets and cupboards extending around and above the stove and refrigerator, under the sink, along all available wall space. Lower cupboards should all have work-table tops of serviceable material—stainless steel or unfinished hardwood.

"Any kitchen can be as serviceable as that of a Pullman dining car, and can serve as many people, if its space is as well used," she explained.

"Cupboards are of first importance, and invaluable as storage space in small apartments. But they must be handy. Women should see that they are built to their reach instead of a man's height. Next important, perhaps, is adequate light."

Mrs. Woodson has achieved brightness and extra light through an ingenious window-effect with mirrors. "You see, I couldn't go through this wall for a window over the sink, so I've used paneled mirrors to look like a window, and to add reflected light. And here is something I wouldn't part with—this ventilated cabinet under the sink where garbage pail, soaps, etc., are kept." The ventilating grille prevents mustiness, she explained.

Cabinet Idea for Used Dishes.

A cabinet for storing soiled dishes and getting them immediately out of the way, is one of Mrs. Woodson's most enthusiastic ideas. She is working on a design for a cabinet, lined with stainless steel or porcelain. It would contain sliding, removable racks in which the busy hostess would stack the dishes as she would bring them from the dining room. The dishes would remain in the air-tight cabinet until they could be washed. For women who could afford it, the cabinet could contain a sprinkler at the top and drain at the bottom so that all the dishes could be rinsed at once, as well as stored.

"A place for getting soiled dishes out of the way is one of the greatest needs of a kitchen, regardless of size," she said. "Of course, if you are serving a large number of people, a double sink is valuable. Recently I served 200 at tea and without a hitch, using just my own servants. Without efficient space for stacking and washing dishes, I believe it would have been impossible without a caterer."

Stainless steel in kitchens is here to stay, is Mrs. Woodson's belief. "It is so pleasant and bright, so easy to keep. It doesn't stain or crack or discolor as does porcelain, and it doesn't scratch or wear off as does enamel. The only other expedient material for kitchen work tables is unstained, unpainted, hardwood. European kitchens use a great deal of wood. It is efficient, sanitary and attractive—scrubbed almost as white as snow."

'Cubbyhole' Dislike Started Hobby.

The contrast of the "cubbyhole kitchen" of a good Washington apartment house where she came as a bride 23 years ago, and the lovely, convenient old kitchen in her grandmother's Mississippi home, started Mrs. Woodson on her kitchen hobby. "Cubbyhole kitchens drove me out of apartment houses after four years of them," she said. She and her husband, a vice president in the Railroad Credit Corporation have traveled widely, and everywhere she has studied improvements in living conditions, particularly—kitchens.

Mrs. Woodson carries her kitchen ideas to her country club, federated club, political club, even the bridge table. She finds women are interested in kitchen ideas, and many of her friends have profited by her knowledge. One friend, who had waited 15 years to remodel, recently completed a modern, satisfying kitchen.

Federal Housing and its making funds available for remodeling is "excellent," says Mrs. Woodson. "Many people are using it, many more will. Remodeling on the Federal Housing plan is becoming quite a hobby with prominent Washington women. I know several who are borrowing money to build useful, beautiful kitchens."

Chromium Bar Is Convenient For the Home

Stand With a Removable Top Easily Converted Into Tea Tray.

By Dudley Harmon,
Pinch-hitting for Ruth Anne Davis.

AFTER a hot day at the office or a strenuous round of golf or tennis, nothing quite hits the spot like a cool, refreshing drink, whether it be beer, lemonade, or a highball. Washington department stores have risen nobly to the occasion by providing some of the most attractive and inexpensive drinking gadgets we have seen for sometime. This season, much is being made of "traveling bars," which are little stands made of wicker or wood or nickel, with niches for glasses and bottles. We saw a particularly interesting one the other day, made of dazzling chromium. It has a removable top, so that the stand can be conveniently turned into a tea-tray if desired. It is covered with liquor-proof paint, so that no amount of splashing with gin or whisky will make any difference whatever. The cover has a little rack around the sides which contains room for eight glass and two bottles. It is priced at $15.

Quick-Cooling Mixer.

ANOTHER NOVEL article in the drinking line is a churn mixer for preparing those drinks which are not made in a cocktail shaker. Very useful for Martinis, Manhattans and highballs. The particular one we have in mind, on sale in a local store, is a long, glass pitcher. The mixer itself is a long, glass stem with a silverplated base. If the pitcher has a handle it can be purchased for $10; without a handle it costs only $4. You can order it in several different shapes, sizes and designs. The idea is to plunge the mixer up and down rather than stir the drink with a spoon. This method is much easier on the arm than stirring, and has the added advantage of cooling quicker.

Excellent Bon Voyage Gift.

AN AMUSING knick-knack in the bathing line is a neat little mitten, shaped to fit the palm of your hand, and filled with a fragrant cleansing preparation. It produces a rich lather, even in salt water, which is quite something! You simply wet it, and then scrub. It may be used again and again and costs only 75 cents. Its greatest advantage is that it saves slipping and fumbling for an elusive cake of soap. You can get a box of three for $2, or a box of six for $3.50. This would make an excellent bon voyage gift, as soap is an item not included in many European hotels.

Beach Sandals Displayed.

THOSE LUCKY enough still to have vacations to look forward to will be interested in the beach sandals, which a local department store is featuring this month. Cork seems to be the keynote in smart beach footwear this month. Every one of these models has a cork sole and heel, as this material is much cooler and lighter than leather. Those who like originality in their fashions will undoubtedly fall for an article called a "peasant sock." This is a combined shoe and sock, made all in one piece. The sock part is composed of a mixture of cotton and lastex, guaranteed to let the coolness in. The color scheme is a gay mixture of reds, blues and greens, and the price is only $3.95. The shoe part has a wide flange heel, which is excellent for walking in the sand, as it grips without sinking in. Another beach sandal comes in a gay Tahitian combination of red, green and yellow stripes, and sells for $3.75. Still another model, made along Grecian lines, has the cork heel and sole, while the sandal part is made of criss-cross rope. The store has a particularly good looking one in brown and yellow.

Porch and Garden Articles.

DOES YOUR summer porch need freshening up? Would a magazine rack, a cocktail tray, a flower holder add to its comfort and convenience? If so, you will find some attractive and useful porch and garden articles at a certain downtown store which specializes in glassware. Some new trays, bowls and flower-pot holders made up in whiter wire are being featured. Although it sounds a bit odd, it is really most effective. For $2.25 you will find a good-looking cocktail tray made of metal with loops of white wire around the edges. For $3.75 a stunning mirror plaque, with a white wire border, may be obtained. Not only would this look well on the porch, but it would be ideal for the dining room table as well. Flower pots made of white enamel also are very attractive, and sell for only 85 cents. There are also some white enamel and wire magazine racks priced at $2. The white color scheme is cool and dainty looking, and the material lends itself to cleaning easily. Although these articles came in only a short time ago, the store has already sold a great many of them.

Call Dudley Harmon, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 305, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

CULBERTSON on BRIDGE

1469
The Suicide Squeeze.

The suicide squeeze is a rare situation in which one of the defenders squeezes the other, so that declarer finds himself showing a net profit on tricks which his adversaries win.

A Gift.

In today's deal the suicide squeeze was unwittingly applied by one of the defenders, and it resulted in declarer's receiving a present of two tricks. These two tricks—or some other miracle—were necessary to declarer for his contract, which was reached by bad bidding.

South, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable

	♠ 9 8 4 ♡ A K Q 2 ◇ 7 4 3 ♣ 9 4 3
♠ Q J 6 5 3 ♡ 3 ◇ 8 5 ♣ 10 8 6 5 2	N W E S	♠ A 10 ♡ J 9 7 6 ◇ K J 10 2 ♣ K Q 7
	♠ K 7 2 ♡ 10 8 5 4 ◇ A Q 9 6 ♣ A J

It is best to pass over the bidding as quickly as possible. After far too bold bidding North and South reached a 3 no-trump contract.

The Play.

West opened the spade five and East took the Ace and returned the ten. South went right in with the King, fearing clubs more than spades. Now South led a heart to dummy's Queen and played back the three of diamonds, East putting on the ten and South the Queen.

Another heart lead by South revealed West's original singleton. This gave South ideas.

West did not think, or at least did not think enough. After taking the Jack of spades he laid down the Queen. If he had abandoned spades and led clubs, declarer could not have avoided going down two tricks. Once he led the spade Queen the contract could not possibly have been set more than one.

East had discarded his low diamond on the third round of spades; now, on the fourth, he gave up the seven of clubs. All was not yet lost, of course, because East still held stoppers in all three suits. A club shift by West would still have saved the day. But West was too avaricious; he wanted all the tricks he could win as soon as he could win them. So he laid down the last spade.

East did the best he could; he played the club Queen, saving two hearts and the King-Jack of diamonds. South saved one heart and two cards in each of the minor suits. Now, too late, West led a club; the King fell to the ace, and the Jack, which was established, South cashed. East was squeezed again. If he played a diamond, both of South's diamonds would be good. If he played a heart, both of dummy's hearts would be good. All East and West took was the spade suit, and the four tricks which it yielded were not enough.

Hot Weather Menus for Week-End Are Suggested; Many Dishes Can Be Prepared Tomorrow Morning

By Dorothea Duncan.

THIS WEEK-END is destined to be hot, so why worry away a perfectly good Sunday in the kitchen? If you have any cooking to do for the week-end, try to do as much of it as possible on Saturday morning. After that call it a day and go out to a comfortable breeze struck nook on the porch or off to the old swimming hole.

The following week-end menus have been planned to cope with the intolerance of old king Sol. Let's start with Sunday's dinner dessert. This is just one of the many suggested dishes that can be prepared on Saturday morning.

Peach Bavarian Cream.

1 package lemon or orange flavored gelatin
1 cup warm water
½ cup heavy cream
1 cup peace juice
2 or 3 drops almond extract
1 cup crushed peaches (fresh or canned) sweetened and drained

Dissolve gelatin in warm water. Add peach juice. Chill until cold and sirupy. Fold in cream, whipped only until thick and shiny, but not stiff. Add peaches and flavoring. Chill until slightly thickened. Turn into individual molds or into one large melon mold. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with fresh peach slices. Serves 8.

Cheese Straws.

Use any leftover plain or puff paste. Roll out to one-quarter inch thickness, sprinkle one-half of it with grated cheese. Fold over the other half and roll out again. Sprinkle with cheese and proceed as before; repeat three times. Cut into very narrow strips and bake for ten minutes on the top shelf of a very hot oven (500 degrees F.).

Spiced Tea.

6 cups boiling water
1 teaspoon whole allspice
1 teaspoon whole cloves

Courtesy U. S. Bureau of Home Economics.

Summer dinners call for just such a finishing flourish as this light, sweet and colorful melon mold of peach Bavarian cream. It is just one of many prepare-it-on-Saturday-and-serve-it-on-Sunday dishes suggested in the week-end menus below.

Cold Sliced Roast Lamb and Onion Soup Are Easy to Serve.

6 teaspoons tea
1 small piece cinnamon
6 tablespoons orange juice
4 tablespoons lemon juice
Sugar syrup
Mint.

Pour boiling water over the allspice, cloves and cinnamon. Cover and let boil three minutes. Add tea, and let steep about three minutes. Strain. Cool and add orange and lemon juice. Sweeten to taste with sugar sirup (equal quantities of water and sugar boiled together until thin sirup forms). Serve in tall glasses with cracked ice. Garnish with a sprig of mint. Serve six.

Spiced tea should be made fresh and served shortly after making, but the sugar sirup may be made up ahead and kept in quantities in a sealed glass jar in the refrigerator.

You won't have to look very far to find a delicious onion soup. Your grocer can supply you with one of several excellent brands. The clear onion soup is suggested rather than the cream of onion for Saturday's dinner menu. You will find delicious canned corned beef also on your grocery store shelf. Just a word to the wise. Before attempting to slice the corned beef, chill the can thoroughly. Remove from the can by cutting off either lid of the can and pressing the beef out onto a wooden board. Then take your sharpest, long knife and making thin even slices of the corned beef will be child's play.

Cold sliced roast lamb has been suggested for Sunday's dinner in preference to a hot roast, because it, too, can be cooked on Saturday morning. If you have an up-to-the-minute oven that is well insulated, and doesn't turn your kitchen into a regular inferno when lighted, you can substitute hot roast lamb for the Sunday dinner menu.

For culinary assistance, call Dorothea Duncan, National 4200, or write to her, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

"WAIT till I show this to Bill. And here he's been spending all of my Saturday afternoons and holidays tramping all over town hunting for a used car bargain."

And here is the secret of Bill's better-half's discovery. The Post now catalogs used cars by price and make, so that you can find your car at a glance. You'll find this directory on the page opposite the comics every Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Look for the heading "A Car for Every Pocketbook."

Washingtonian Common Name All Over Nation

Sunday Post to Have Story of Many Places Honoring First President.

So you're proud of being a Washingtonian! Well . . . don't get too uppity about it. There are several thousand persons sprinkled throughout these United States who have just as much right to the title as you have, and many of them have never been near the District of Columbia.

Washington, it seems, is a favorite name for towns all over the country—28 of them in all, with populations ranging from 35 inhabitants (West Virginia's Washington) to 24,500 (Pennsylvania's Washington).

Ken Kimbel, who probably knows more about these places than any man living, tells the amusing tale of these cities and towns, giving interesting sidelights on their histories and how they came into being. His story is a feature of the Special Articles Section of this Sunday's Post.

District Legislation.

District residents will be particularly interested also in a comprehensive analysis of District of Columbia legislation in the current session of Congress, which will be in the Main News Section. An outline of bills passed, bills pending and their chances of success, and dead bills will be included.

Among the most important features this Sunday will be an exclusive article by Dr. Leonid I. Strakhovsky, well known as a writer and professor of modern European history, at Georgetown University. Dr. Strakhovsky recently journeyed through Italy and was even granted an interview by Mussolini himself.

George H. Boothby, formerly European war correspondent with the Rainbow Division, has written an article full of stirring reminiscences of Father Francis Patrick Duffy. The Rainbow Division holds its annual convention in Washington at the end of this week.

Mexico's Six-Year Plan.

A special article on Mexico's six-year plan, as compared with our own New Deal, is another feature of this week's Sunday Post. Elizabeth Shirley Enochs, who has made a special study of Pan-American affairs, is the author.

A discussion of the coming all-American aircraft show, for which plans virtually have been completed, will be an Army and Navy page feature. Readers will find in addition a story of the "Aerial Cruise" Washington pilots are conducting to the aircraft show, and an article describing the summer training plans of the military organizations made up of Washington officers.

A fascinating anaylsis of modern art and its mediums by Harold Rhodenbaugh highlights the art page this week. According to Mr. Rhodenbaugh, science and art are at last beginning to join hands in the task of interpreting the world. As a result the artist has been given new power beyond his fondest dreams.

Architects' Varied Art.

Laura Vitray contributes another interesting article on this page of this Sunday's Post. Mrs. Vitray holds that architects are often not only architects, but painters and etchers and sculptors. To prove her point, she discusses the exhibition that several hundred Federal architects are holding at the National Museum through July.

In the amusement section, Nelson B. Bell's comment on the current theater will be supplemented by a beautiful drawing of Grace Moore, by Herndon Davis, and many other features.

Complete local, State, national and world coverage of news and sports will be found in the main news and sports sections. Washington and Eastern social events, with reports from popular resorts, will be profusely illustrated in the society section.

Boys and girls will be delighted with the Parade of Youth, included each Sunday with The Washington Post. This eight-page newspaper is designed especially for the youngsters and is chock-full of interesting stories and pictures.

Women will find all the latest information on style, cooking, interior decoration and other interests particularly feminine in the household pages this Sunday.

Discovering America
With Maxine Davis

Maxine Davis, magazine and feature writer, has gone forth to discover the America of 1935. She is writing of her experiences for The Post. Her sixth article appears today.

Knoxville, Tenn., July 11.—To the maidens of Norris, the TVA town, Prince Charming is no combination of Clark Gable and a millionaire's heir, but a companionable soul who will support a wife and three children. He doesn't have to earn more than $2,800 a year.

I gathered these statistics when I blundered in on a half dozen daughters of the TVA, gathered together on the screened porch of one of those unbelievably delightful model houses, settled like a snug gray hen on the side of a ravine.

A card game was the excuse for the conference! Michigan poker, whatever that may be! Eavesdropping, I noted they weren't very earnest gamblers, these girls ranging from a mature 14 to 17 years old. Jobs and husbands were more exciting than a full house, or whatever is high in Michigan poker.

While I admired the electric kitchen my hostess was displaying with justified pride, and the handsome cherry bed and vanity dresser her husband, a bookkeeper, had made in the trades shops, I heard this chatter

"When I'm a dress designer, I'm going to specialize in smart cheap clothes," a green-eyed redhead announced. "I don't see why a house dress has to look like a sack of salt."

She Prefers Teaching.

"I think it's wonderful you can do that. I'm going right on with my business course. I'd rather be a teacher, but they say there are too many teachers for the jobs as it is," sighed a perky miss with a Norma Shearer head dress and, yes, Mary Pickford dimples.

"But even so, if you can be a good teacher, don't you think you ought to take your own talents into consideration?" argued the potential crossroads Schiapparelli.

"Well, just so I can do something till I get married, I'll be glad," a shy third contributed.

Here I gave up and crashed the party. "What kind of husbands are you hunting?"

They were unanimous. A man with a job. A man who can keep his job. A fellow who will share some of their interests. He doesn't have to be rich. As I've said, $2,800 is plenty. And they won't supplement it. They don't want careers, these intelligent-looking girls. Housekeeping as they see it is a full-time occupation.

How did they arrive at that figure? In school, if you please. In the cream and brown schoolhouses where classes are fun because they relate to the practical business of everyday living. Matrimony there is a course of study. Not, you understand, how to get and hold a husband, but how to budget and can and cook and sew. How to plan nutritive and novel diets at a minimum of expense. How to market and to store. How to handle problems of interior decoration; not just making pretty pillows or lamp shades, but basic principles of mass and form and design, of structure and wearability. And how to keep a home happy for children; never nag, never argue bitterly before them; keep mealtime a recurrently happy hour. And so on.

An Extraordinary Community.

These youngsters reflect the attitude of Norris toward life. It's an extraordinary community. It has, of course, a common interest—the dam rising in its gigantic bulk and its infinite potentialities under the menfolk's hands. But the design for living woven here is even more significant than the stupendous engineering job. The beauty of the small houses, the community of interest in town problems, from landscaping to organizing a medical cooperative to employ the services of a physician (though it costs extra to have a baby—$10 extra!); the spontaneous interests in handicrafts mutual to the Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady, as well as their husbands, are all part of a social experiment that merits more than my limited space.

To me, one of the most moving is the religious life. There is no church there, for there are 14 different creeds represented, and only one-third of the whole group belongs to one, the Baptist Church. So here in the heart of the Bible belt; here where magic is still rife, where it's best to build your house of wood peeled by the dark of the moon; here in a State where the town of Dayton is preparing to celebrate the anniversary of the Scopes trial; here men and women and children worship in the public school, under the organization of the Norris Religious Fellowship, directed by a grand white-topped Dane named Dr. Eric Thompson.

Because Dr. Thompson insists that religion should relate itself to human welfare, this is one thing the Norris congregation has done: It found a family in its area, mother and father and five children, augmented by triplets, all almost starving, and one of the babies dying of exposure. The fellowship got a two-acre lot, built a $1,300 house, and set the family back on the road to contentful and healthy living.

Liquor Board's Transfer Veto Taken to Court

Dealer Challenges Denial of Change in Permit on Congestion Grounds.

The right of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board to reject a request for a transfer of a class A liquor license on the grounds that the proposed change would "congest" an already adequately served neighborhood was challenged in the District Supreme Court yesterday by Maurice Levitan, 3711 Jenifer street northwest.

Levitan first sought permission of the board to transfer his 1319 Seventh street northwest license to the southeast corner of Eleventh and E streets northwest. Later he amended his petition and sought to transfer a license granted to 425 Tenth street northwest to the E street place.

The board held a hearing and refused to sanction the proposal on the theory that there were three class A licenses in the immediate vicinity of the E street address and that to grant a fourth license would further decrease the profits of the other places, two of which, the board said, were not showing a substantial profit.

Attorney Raymond Gittleman said there was no authority in law to support the "arbitrary and capricious" action of the board in refusing to sanction the transfer on the sole ground that to do so would "congest" the neighborhood. He asked the court to direct the board members to show cause why an order should not be issued compelling them to grant Levitan's request.

Band of Police Boy's Club Plays Tonight

The Metropolitan Police Boys' Club Band will give a two-hour concert tonight, beginning at 8 o'clock, in Marion Park, Fifth street at E southeast. The band, composed of 72 pieces, will be under the direction of Clinton J. Brown.

Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, and Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, have been invited to attend.

Rainbow Unit Reunion Draws 1,000 Veterans

Banquet to Close Sessions of Division's Annual Convention.

American heroes of the Champagne, the Marne, St. Mihiel and the Argonne—members of the Rainbow Division—are arriving to hold their seventeenth annual national reunion in Washington. Approximately 1,000 of them who fought side by side in Europe will gather again to shake hands, exchange cigarettes and to talk over things they did together in France some 18 years ago.

A three-day program will begin this morning with a business session, M. Manning Marcus, president of the Rainbow Division's Veterans Association, will preside.

In the afternoon the delegates will be the guests of Clark Griffith at the Washington-Detroit baseball game. An alternative attraction is a trip to the crime laboratory of the Department of Justice. This evening a smoker will be held in the Willard Hotel, with music by the United States Army Band and entertainment from local theaters.

Tomorrow morning the veterans will make a pilgrimage to the Arlington Cemetery, where memorial services will be held for 125 dead comrades buried there. The Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, will be in charge. The ceremony will be preceded by a garrison review at Fort Myer. In the evening a reunion ball will be held.

The Sunday program includes business sessions and a boat trip to Mount Vernon. The reunion will close with a banquet Sunday evening, commemorative of the division's stand against the Prussian Guard in the Champagne sector, between Rheims and Verdun, on Bastile Day, July 14, 1918, where infantry units engaged in hand-to-hand fighting with the Germans.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the United States Army, who was a divisional officer of the Rainbow in France, will make the principal address, which will be broadcast over a Columbia network. Col. J. Monroe Johnston, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who was the wartime commander of the 117th Engineers, will be master of ceremonies.

Elevator Operator Stricken on Duty

Arthur Jenkins, 38, an elevator operator in a downtown hotel, was reported to be in a critical condition yesterday at Gallinger Hospital, suffering from spinal meningitis.

Jenkins, who lives in the 900 block H street northwest, collapsed after he had returned his elevator to the ground floor of the hotel about 6 p. m. Wednesday.

Camden, N. J., July 11 (U.P.).—The State board of bar examiners opened hearings today into charges that 1935 bar examination questions were sold to seven students for $2,300. The students reportedly claimed they were "gyped" because the questions were not asked on the examination.

'Boy' Bank Head, Out of Jail, Sued

$16,840 Stock Levy Asked From R. L. Schreiner.

Raymond L. Schreiner, former "boy" president of the now defunct Bank of Brightwood, who served a term in the Lorton reformatory following his plea of guilty to a charge of mishandling funds of the bank, was named defendant in a suit filed in District Supreme Court yesterday to enforce collection of a levy of 100 per cent on the 1,684 shares of the bank's stock he held at the time of its collapse.

Schreiner, it was shown, has failed to pay the $16,840 demanded of him and made possible because the laws of Arizona, where the bank was chartered, expressly provide for such an assessment to help pay off all creditors in full.

The bank was declared insolvent July 13, 1932, and Claude H. Woodward was named as its receiver. The bank has a capital stock of $100,000 with $10 set as par for each.

Schreiner was released from Lorton in April. He was said to have been the youngest bank president in the United States.

Steady Drop Noted In U. S. Birth Rate By Health Expert

Marylander Talks To P.-T. Conference

1,032 Infants Died in State During Past Year Alone, He Says.

A steady decline in the number of children born in the United States has been noted in the last several years, according to Dr. J. H. Mason Knox, jr., chief o. the bureau of child hygiene of the Maryland State department of health.

Dr. Knox yesterday told the State parent-teacher conference at the University of Maryland that a few years ago there were 30 babies to every 1,000 persons in this country.

Today there are only 15 or 16 babies to this number of persons, he said. In the State of Maryland alone 1,032 babies, out of a total of 14,000, died during the past year.

He said the majority of these deaths were in the rural sections of the State. Lack of prenatal clinics in the rural sections was given as an explanation for this.

Pleads for Support.

Dr. Knox pleaded with the women for public support of these clinics and for child health consultations. He declared these never would be brought into universal use by law, but by public opinion alone.

The day's session opened at 9:15 a. m. in the Agricultural Building auditorium with Mrs. Milton Moore, second vice president of the Maryland Congress of Parents and Teachers, presiding.

At 9:30 a. m. Mrs. J. K. Pettengill, vice president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, conducted an exemplary school. This included study, recitation, examination and graduation.

Others who spoke were Miss Ellen Lombard, associate specialist in parent education, and Miss Mildred Geare, Baltimore newspaperwoman.

H. C. Byrd, acting president of the University of Maryland, entertained the women at a reception at 4 p. m. Social events were held in the evening. The conference will close today at 2:30 p. m.

Maryland Balance $1,351,042 in June

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., July 11.—The State ended June with a current surplus of $1,351,042.71 in general and special funds, according to the monthly balance sheet issued today by State Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr.

The annuity bond fund showed a deficit of $216,278.98, caused by payment of $1,770,790 from the fund on June 15 for bonds and interest, and by the payment of the $1,000,000 short-term loan negotiated by the State during the period of financial stringency this spring.

It was pointed out the deficit in the fund was not alarming, as heavy tax payments begin flowing into the fund at the end of this month.

A total of $4,887,743.40 in uncollected taxes remains outstanding, including $3,317,585.09 for the current year.

Franklin Peaches Gain.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., July 11.—With indications that the Franklin County peach crop will be about 20 per cent above the crop of last year, it is evident that the county will continue to hold first place in Pennsylvania in peach-growing. According to the Department of Agriculture at Harrisburg, this county held the record for several seasons.

Dogs Kill 7 Rabbits; Police Investigating

Police yesterday opened an investigation of a family massacre which cost seven lives and plunged into despair the 25 children who attend the National Child Research Center.

The victims were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Rabbit and their five little rabbits, all pets of the 2 to 5-year-old youngsters. They were killed early yesterday by dogs which leaped the high fence surrounding the grounds and tore loose the strong wire which protected the pet pen.

Policemen who were summoned were impressed by the dogs' feat in working loose the reinforced mesh front of the cage to get to the animals. None of the seven was spared. The research center, a private school for small children, is at 3209 Highland place northwest.

Appeal Is Sent To White House By Potato Belt

Virginia Eastern Shore Growers Ask Speed on Warren Bill.

By the Associated Press.

Painter, Va., July 11.—Striking potato growers of the Virginia Eastern Shore today appealed directly to President Roosevelt for "prompt action" on the Warren bill, which was favorably reported yesterday by the House Agricultural Committee without a recommendation to the Rules Committee for immediate consideration.

The group, which yesterday sent Representative Otis Bland of Virginia a telegram signed by 375 farmers asking speed on the bill, today told the Chief Executive they noticed the agricultural committee's failure to ask for a rule to get the measure before the House. The committee approved the bill by a 12-to-10 vote, which indicated strong opposition to it in the committee.

"We understand that on June 28 you strongly indorsed the Warren bill and urged prompt enactment," the growers said in their wire to Mr. Roosevelt.

"We are in desperate condition here. Nothing can save us but a crop control program regulated by the Administration. We have not received the cost of production for our potatoes but one year out of five. Potatoes are our major crop and we cannot exist under these circumstances.

"We beg of you to see that prompt action is taken on the Warren potato bill.

"Our homes and chattels are mortgaged, our farm machinery is dilapidated, and we cannot pay our taxes."

The ban on loading continued today while potatoes moved slowly to market. It was expected that the tracks would be cleared by tonight. Pickets continued to guard truck movements.

Funds to Restore Old Church Sought

St. Andrew's, Near Leonardtown, Built in 1766.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leonardtown, Md., July 11.—The Rev. Jesse M. Woodrow, rector of St. Andrew's Parish, has started a fund to aid in restoring old St. Andrew's P. E. Church, four miles from here. Contributions of $1 each are solicited from friends and descendants of former members of this colonial church, built in 1766.

Repairs are needed in the interior, as some of the woodwork has decayed and painting also is needed. Services are held once a month in the building in the summer season. A church register dating from 1753, and a silver communion service given by Queen Anne, are among the prized possessions of the church officers. A state road recently built passes by the yard of the church, making it accessible at all seasons.

Guards Thwart Prison Delivery At Moundsville

By the Associated Press.

Moundsville, Va., July 11.—Six prisoners, two of them life-termers, today overpowered five penitentiary guards with their own maces in an unsuccessful break for freedom.

Three of the guards were sent to a hospital suffering from severe bruises and contusions. Two were only slightly hurt.

An hour after the disturbance Warden C. F. McClintic said the situation was quiet and the prisoners sent to solitary cells.

"The prisoners, all bad men who should have been hanged long ago, attacked the guards, who were armed only with gas guns and maces," said the warden.

"The convicts surrendered after going into the carpenter shop. They were subdued only by courageous pluck of the guards. The prison is undermanned and we were able to assemble only eight guards to bring the situation under control."

The warden said there was no demonstration among the other 2,000 convicts of the 70-year-old institution, which originally was built to house 850 prisoners.

The two lifers involved were identified as Henry Cano, of Charleston, sentenced for the slaying of Deputy Sheriff R. L. Shamblin two years ago, and Sam Blevins, of Wheeling, sentenced for killing a crossing watchman 15 years ago.

The other prisoners were serving 20 to 25 years. The badly injured guards were W. H. Mosly, T. D. Hume and D. H. Prunty.

Prohibition Benefits Virginia State Store

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., July 11.—The decision of the people of Rockingham County, N. C., not to permit the controlled sale of liquor, rendered on Tuesday with a 527 majority, had an indirect bearing on the sale of spirits at the two local State stores.

Legalized liquor in Rockingham, which adjoins this county, would have depreciated the volume of sales which are being made to customers from across the State line.

Writ Forbids Process Tax On Peanuts

U. S. Judge Way Decrees Preliminary Restraint Against Collector.

Two Virginia Companies Allege Penny Impost Is Unconstitutional.

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., July 11.—Judge Luther B. Way, in Federal Court today granted a preliminary injunction restraining the collector of internal revenue for Virginia from collecting, until further orders from the court the 1-cent-per-pound processing tax on peanuts.

The injunction was granted on motion of the Old Dominion Peanut Co., of Norfolk, and the Franklin Peanut Co., of Franklin. The two companies were required to post bonds.

Legality Is Questioned.

The attorneys for the two companies questioned the legality of the imposition of the tax by the AAA and the right of Congress to invest in a Cabinet member, the Secretary of Agriculture, in this instance, the authority to impose any sort of tax.

The action was filed against N. B. Early, collector of internal revenue for Virginia.

H. W. Woodward, former assistant district attorney, associated with Cyrus W. Beale, of Richmond, as attorney for the Franklin company, opened the arguments. Woodward presented the application.

Beale read the text of the petition filed by his company stating that the 1-cent-per-pound processing tax did not revert to the general fund of the Government, but was used for "special classes," namely, the growers and the crushers, who extracted the oil from the nut and who were able to buy, store and speculate in peanuts because of the exemption from the tax.

Lawyer Challenges System.

Beale, in opening his argument, questioned the Government's authority under the Constitution to impose the tax.

Woodward said he was prepared to attack the legality of the tax.

Harry H. Holt, assistant district attorney, took issue with Beale regarding the disposition and use of the tax levied, declaring that it did go into the general fund.

Leon T. Seawell, representing the local peanut concern, presented the claim of his client. He stated that the Old Dominion company had paid approximately $50,000 to the Government in processing taxes.

Paralysis Epidemic Denied in Virginia; Cases Now Total 90

Sea Bears Life Buoy Of Mohawk 1,600 Mi.

Sixteen hundred miles from the spot in the Atlantic Ocean where 34 persons lost their lives January 25, a Danish motorship, Prometheus, picked up a lifebuoy marked Mohawk, according to a report received yesterday by the Navy Hydrographic Office.

The Mohawk, Ward Line Havana to New York liner, met disaster in a collision 9 miles off Sea Girt, N. J., within a few months after another Ward liner, the Morro Castle, burned off the Jersey coast.

The find was made about 550 miles southward of Cape Race, Newfoundland, the Hydrographic Office said. Navy officials believed the buoy was carried southward in the inshore southerly drift before working into the Gulf Stream, which carried it to the northward and eastward.

Increase Is Traced to 5 Counties, City of Richmond.

Crisis Discussed With U. S. Officials

Canvalescent Serum Is Held Valueless as Curative.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 11.—The outbreak of infantile paralysis in Virginia has not reached epidemic proportions throughout the State, although there is a definite increase in the prevalence of the disease in the south central section, Dr. I. C. Riggin, State health commissioner, said today.

Seven additional cases of poliomyelitis were reported to the health department today. Three of them came from the City of Richmond, two from Lunenburg, one from Halifax and one from Greensville County. This raises to 90 the number of cases recorded here since June 1.

The increase in paralysis is due principally to the gain in five counties and the City of Richmond, Dr. Riggin said. Counties of the south side have reported cases in numbers as follows: Halifax, 13; Mecklenburg, 8; Lunenburg, 13; Brunswick, 9; Dinwiddie, 5.

"It is impossible to predict to what extent poliomyelitis will increase in the State," Dr. Riggin said. Representatives of the health department here are seeing every case they are asked to see, he added, pointing out that all facilities of the health department are being directed toward the control and supervision of infantile paralysis at the present time.

Dr. Riggin discussed the problem at length with Federal officials in Washington, but said no request had been made for Federal aid. Seventy per cent of the cases reported are of children under 10 years of age. On a population proportion basis it was estimated that the cases are evenly distributed between Negroes and whites.

"It seems to be well proven that convalescant serum is of no value as a curative agent and, in fact, when used intraspinally, at times may do some harm," it was asserted today in a bulletin on infantile paralysis mailed to all physicians and health officers of Virginia by the health department.

The bulletin describes experiments with vaccines in treatment of poliomyelitis and states there has not been "sufficient experimental evidence" offered with controls to indicate the value of serums at this time.

Public Meeting Set to Discuss By-Pass Route

Hagerstown Mayor Calls Forum After Protests of Present Plan.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., July 11.—Seeking advice on what route the proposed by-pass of Route 40 through Hagerstown shall take, Mayor I. M. Wertz has called a mass meeting of citizens to discuss the project.

Scores of protests against the proposed route through the beautiful City Park, cutting off a section of the lake there, have been pouring into the mayor's office since the State roads commission announced the route.

Merchants also have protested changing the route, contending that much tourist trade would be diverted around the business district over the proposed new route.

The Hagerstown Garden Club and other women's organizations have gone on record as opposing the by-pass through the City Park, contending that a main highway through the park would be hazardous to children who play in the park.

Mayor Wertz has set July 17 as the date for the forum, which will be held at City Hall.

Is Selected As June's Finest Family Picture

Choice Made by Group; Variety Club to Cruise; Amusement Jottings.

By Nelson B. Bell.

A bulletin just to hand announces that RKO-Radio's screen adaptation of Liam O'Flaherty's sturdy story of a lumbering Irish Judas, who destroyed himself in the betrayal of a friend, has been selected by the National Screen Council, an organization having its headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., as the outstanding picture shown in this country during June.

By virtue of this distinction, "The Informer," starring Victor McLaglen, with Margot Grahame and a splendid cast, wins the Blue Ribbon Award bestowed monthly by the trade journal, Boxoffice, upon the picture deemed best of that month for family consumption.

Acclaimed by critics of the Capital, as well as all the rest of the country, as one of the finest pictures ever made, "The Informer," somehow, failed to click at the Metropolitan box offices.

Is Triumph Abroad.

This, however, does not in the least dim the luster of Vic McLaglen's magnificent performance in the role of Gyppo Nolan, or indicate that RKO-Radio is a loser by having made the film. It is reported to be doing tremendous business in England, Ireland, Canada and other parts of the British Empire, so that, by the time the final count is cast up, it will write itself down among the big profit makers.

This is particularly gratifying to Washington, because "The Informer" was the first productional effort of Bob Sisk, formerly in charge of Eastern publicity for RKO-Radio and only comparatively recently elevated to the rank of producer on the West Coast. Bob has many friends in this city and they all were pulling for his first picture to be a hit. It is rather a sorry commentary upon the discriminating taste of the mass of American theatergoers that "The Informer" did not enjoy the universal popularity which its intrinsic worth so completely justified.

Picked by Notable Group.

This June award of the National Screen Council is at least a partial recognition of the merit of a film that deserves all the honors that can be heaped upon it—and not because Bob Sisk and Vic McLaglen are both friends of mine, either!

The National Screen Council, incidentally, is composed of the country's foremost film editors, motion picture chairmen of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, the State film chairmen of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and other groups interested in the betterment of motion pictures.

The preceding monthly selections to which the Boxoffice's Blue Ribbon Award has been made include "Roberta," the winner for March; "Naughty Marietta," for April, and "G Men" for May.

In addition to those already named, the cast of "The Informer" included Heather Angel, Preston Foster, Wallace Ford, Una O'Connor and J. H. Kerrigan. It is interesting to note that both Margot Grahame and Preston Foster appear in support of Richard Dix in "The Arizonian," opening a week's engagement on the screen of the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan tomorrow.

The Belasco's Plans.

A cordial note of greeting from the Cameo Theater, in New York, where Manager Al Tamarin of the Belasco is whiling away a part of the time being devoted to remodeling and refurbishing on Lafayette Square, is handed in after the postman's second ring, along with a neatly typed statement to the effect that alterations are progressing satisfactorily at the Belasco and the house positively will reopen within a day or two, one way or the other, of Labor Day.

As evidence of the booking plans that are being pursued during the summer, Mr. Tamarin, on behalf of Matty Radin, head of the circuit of theaters specializing in foreign-made films, of which the Belasco is a part, confides that the opening attraction of the new season will be "Loves of a Dictator," a British-made picture, co-starring Clive Brook and Madeleine Carroll. This is a powerful historical romance of sixteenth century Denmark.

Other Features Booked.

In addition to "Loves of a Dictator," the management reports the following features for later showing on the Belasco screen: George Arliss in his first modern picture in some months, now being completed on the other side, still untitled but expected to maintain Gaumont British's recent high standard of excellence; a picture also as yet untitled, starring Conrad Veidt, star of last season's "Power"; Peter Lorre and Nova Pilbeam in "The Man Who Knew Too Much"; Marta Eggerth, the blonde soprano of "The Unfinished Symphony," and Ian Kiepura in "My Heart Is Calling"; Ian Kiepura as individual star of "My Song for You," and Evelyn Laye, now in this country with her husband, Frank Lawton, the grown David Copperfield of the Dickens picture in which Freddie Bartholomew appeared as the younger David, in "Evensong."

This list will serve to corroborate recent information supplied here concerning some of the pictures which it contains and which it was feared Washington would miss.

During the first year of its existence Washington's Tent No. 11 in the national chain of Variety Clubs has fully justified its purpose by financing several worthy charities. Although its weekly Monday luncheons and smokers in the Willard will be discontinued for the summer after next Monday, when Arthur Godfrey and Arthur de Titta will be "Kings for a Day," this does not mean that the activities of the club will be permitted to languish even during the hot weather.

The first annual "Showboat Cruise" of the club will be held Saturday night, July 20, under the chairmanship of Carter Barron, division manager for Loew's, Inc. It is the plan to have two big "name" bands on the cruise, which will weigh anchor at 12, midnight, and end some time in the small hours of Sunday morning. One of these bands will be Jolly Coburn and his Rainbow Room Orchestra, direct from Rockefeller Center, New York. Coburn will bring Kathleen Wells, late star of the Maxwell House Showboat program and Jack Pearl's aerial hour.

Tickets for this event are priced at $2 per person and are worth more. This column will book orders—accompanied by cash remittance—but it exceedingly behooves those desirous of getting in on a good thing to work fast.

"Going Native."

Speaking of Loew's, as we were at least indirectly, and heading off another bale of inquiries concerning the matter, it may be said that upon his return from New York, Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Fox in charge of the third annual, all-Washington revue, "Going Native," to be staged at the Fox in August, expressed every confidence that from the standpoint of production, as well as personnel, this year's revue will be the daddy of them all!

It was further reiterated that no definite selection of cast has as yet been made. That, however, is a matter that will be promptly attended to and it is expected that rehearsals will begin next week.

A call has already been made for chorus people to report at the Joe Brown studio, 1210 G street, at 10:30 o'clock the morning of July 20.

The date of the performance also will be announced next week.

With Phil Lampkin devoting much of his time to musical arrangements for "Going Native," Mr. Ford is beginning to fret a little about skits and blackouts suitable for use in the revue. He has a few but can use more. So all you aspiring authors, playwrights and smart-crackers get busy and see what you can do in the matter of brief sketches. Send your ideas to Gene Ford, manager, Loew's Fox. Then order your own 24-sheets!

Veterans Return.

Veterans of previous Roadside Theater productions and several new faces will be seen in the cast of "To Die at Dawn," third of this season's plays, to be presented for the first time next Monday night and continue the bill in the barn theater out the Rockville Pike 4 miles beyond Bethesda, Md., for a fortnight.

Harold Stepler, who scored a hit as the old Gypsy in "Murder in the Red Barn" last year, and as the Governor in "The Tavern," is the villain of the piece, vice Eugene Kressin, vacationing briefly. William Phillips, the Dicey Morris of "After Dark," the opening bill of the current season, will supply the comedy relief as a stuttering son of the hills. Ralph Fowler, hero of the first play, will appear as a detective. Other familiar figures will be Thomas M. Cahill, Lavina Merrick and Charles A. Bell.

Heroine Is Newcomer.

The heroine, Gail Dennis, is a newcomer to the group. Before coming to Washington last winter, she spent a year "on the road" with a group of Chicagoans who toured the principal cities of the Middle West producing musical shows. John Edwards, cast as the hero, has appeared with the University of Maryland Footlight Club. In the role of Mrs. Milward, mother of the heroine, is Elinor Cox Karsten, prominent in the productions of the Pierce Hall Players last season.

Another former Roadsider who returns for his first role of the summer is Kenn Romney, the inimitable, as the saying goes, Willum of "The Tavern," who will be cast as John Dodson in the death at dawn business.

And mention of Prof. Lampkin reminds me. Next week, that would be beginning tomorrow, Prof. Lampkin's overture at the Fox will consist of the "Mardi Gras" movement from the "Mississippi Suite," by Ferde Grofe, one of America's most distinctive and most distinguished composers and arrangers. It was Mr. Grofe who made all of Paul Whiteman's tricky orchestral arrangements in the early days of that conductor's eminence and had almost as much to do with putting Whiteman on top as Whiteman had himself. If modern American music ever has found a brilliant as well as typical expression in advanced rhythms and idioms, it has most certainly been through the pen of Ferde Grofe. Prof. Lampkin's overture should be eagerly awaited—as it probably is being right this very minute!

Civic Group on Air.

The National Civic Theater Society will make its radio debut this afternoon from 4:30 to 5 over station WOL in a modified version of "The Bride the Sun Shines On," which they are currently acting in the Odeon Theater, on the grounds of the National Park Seminary, at Forest Glen, Md.

Catherine McCord, one of the principals in the play, incidentally, is one of Gov. Ruby Laffoon's Kentucky Colonelesses, or whatever it is you call the female of the species.

And Robert G. Pitkin, veteran character actor, comedian and singer, also a member of the society, was one of the original cast of the "March of Time" broadcasts. This afternoon's experience will not be strictly in the nature of a novelty to him! Mark my word.

The sympathy of his friends and associates in the motion picture industry is being extended today to Charles J. Brennan, manager of the Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theater, upon the death of his mother in New York City yesterday morning at 1:20 a. m. Mr. Brennan was vacationing in Staunton, Va., when summoned to New York last Friday. He is expected to return to the Capital on Sunday.

Methuselah, Please Write!

Joseph Calleia, once known to the stage as Joseph Spurin-Calleia, was cast as Joaquim Murietta in the M-G-M picture, "Robin Hood of El Dorado." Mr. Calleia, it seems, is 32 years of age, whereas the Joaquim of the period treated in the film was 23. So Mr. Calleia was dropped.

And who gets the part? Mr. Warner Baxter gets the part.

Reference to every year book in the shop discloses them to be in perfect unanimity on the point of Mr. Baxter's birth, which was in 1893. That would make him 42 years old.

But Mr. Calleia, ten years younger, was too ancient!

Show business.

First-Aid Note.

In case Mr. Baxter should turn out to be a trifle mature, there is always C. Aubrey Smith!

Sylvan Theater

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

"A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM." The Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks present the Washington Community Players in an abridged version of the comedy by William Shakespeare, under the direction of Esther Galbraith and Robert Halsted. At the National Sylvan Theater. Reviewed Wednesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

In a superb setting and on a night eminently fitting such a play, the Washington Community Players scored an artistic and dramatic triumph last evening at the National Sylvan Theater, giving its second al fresco performance of an abridged version of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," before a crowd which the police estimated to number more than 15,000.

Prior to the play the United States Army Band, under the direction of Capt. Thomas F. Darcy, played a brief concert, and, for the benefit of the evening's dramatic work, offered the overture to Mendelssohn's opus based on the bard's great fantasy-comedy.

A Play Within Play.

Last evening, as it was on the occasion of the production last season—and probably is the case whenever this particular play is staged—the most eagerly awaited and keenly appreciated scene was that in which the craftsmen of Athens stage a version of the "lamentable and dire tragedy of Pyramis and Thisbe" to celebrate the three marriages.

As the principals in this play-within-a-play J. Edmond Veitch and James M. Rawls played their parts to the hilt, giving an excruciating burlesque of the ancient legend that came close to being inspired. Running a close second was Harry Crow, whose impediment of speech made the role the more devastating. Paul W. Murphy played Moonshine in a most effective manner, with H. Stanley Protheroe again being signally successful as Wall. Over the proceedings Kent Dyer presided as the precursor of the modern m. c. and bookholder.

Will Be Repeated Tonight.

The main love tangles of this complicated drama were played by Eugene Kressin (quite without his Roadside leering!) and Adele Whiteside, and by Herman P. Reiss and Edythe Lazaroff Goldman, while William J. McLean and Jean Smith (as Hippolyta) furnished the principals for the third wedding.

Space limitations preclude further words of praise for this production and the mentioning of the many charming performances and the dancers so efficiently trained by Alice Louise Hunter.

The play will be repeated this evening. Chair privileges will be available at the usual places for a nominal charge.

Old Schoolhouse Being Preserved

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chambersburg, Pa., July 11.—Work has started for a new floor in the historic Browns Mill School in Antrim Township, Franklin County. The place is being restored by the Old Browns Mill Memorial Association as a memorial to the one-room schools of the county.

The schoolhouse is the oldest in recent use in the county. It was built in 1836 and abandoned in 1921 for a consolidated school.

Early this year the Franklin County Education Association launched a move to preserve the buildings and authorized the organization of the memorial association. Thus far $800 had been collected for the project.

5 Shots Fail to Stop Fleeing Office Burglar

George Young, proprietor of a laundry at 1104 North Capitol street, was awakened about 3 a. m. yesterday morning by the ringing of the bell on the cash register in his shop. Brabbing a gun he ran into the office and found a large colored man rifling the machine.

When he was discovered, the thief jumped through a window and fled down an alley. Young fired five shots at the fleeing figure from a .38-caliber pistol but failed to stop the marauder.

Rivers Wins As His Foe Collapses

Belloise, Trailing in 7th, Is Victim of Heart Attack, Doctor Says.

Burke Takes Decision From Buckley in Four-Rounder.

JOE RIVERS, 130 pounds of California featherweight, can tell his grandchildren about a fight he fought once. It was in the Legion Arena in Washington on July 11, 1935, and he battered Mike Beloise, world's second ranking feather so badly that Beloise collapsed at the end of the seventh round and was out for five minutes.

Doctors said that the mild little New York boxer suffered a heart attack. Others close to him said that Mike had been ill for several weeks and took the fight under the impression that ten rounds with Rivers would be merely 45 minutes of light exercise.

But old California Joe from the very first bell was out to show the 1,100 fans who came to the reopening of the Northeast bowl that he was no has-been, no flop fighter. His terrific power punch was working in six of the seven rounds. And even had Mike been in the pink he would have had his hands full of wildman.

Rivers Gains Lead.

Rivers fought three fast rounds in which he clearly outpointed his foe. In the fourth he slowed and the customers began muttering things anent "same old Joe." From then on, however, the battle was all California. In the sixth, Beloise was pitched through the ropes and, in what turned out to be the final three minutes, he was wild as the Anacostia flats used to be.

Beloise's manager said that the boy had been ailing since his last fight, with Dick Walsh on July 1, but except for an inability to land on the dancing Rivers he showed no ill effects until he fell flat on the canvas after the seventh bell. The ranking feather has never before lost by either a knockout or technical K. O. Thirty minutes after the arena had been cleared, Beloise was still groggy, although doctors pronounced him out of danger.

The semi-final came to a quick and inglorious end early in the third round, when a Baltimore youngster named Frankie Cicero was awarded a technical knockout over one Andy Kelley, of Richmond. Kelley went to his corner after blood appeared from a cut over his left eyebrow and a doctor pronounced the alleged deep gash too dangerous for him to continue.

The two 140 pounders were just beginning to give evidences of a little activity when the Richmonder bumped head-on into Cicero and came away with his ailing eyebrow.

Burke Takes Decision.

Kirkwood Burke, former District Golden Gloves champion, fighting his second professional engagement, was given a four-round decision over Buster Buckley, Alexandrian just coming over from the amateurs. Burke failed to land a punch until mid-way in the second round and suffered one knock-down. He came back nicely thereafter, however, to hold the Virginian at least on even terms. Both boys are clean-cut heavies.

The evening's gore spilling was started with a couple of fast colored fights. In a battle scheduled for six rounds, Meyer Rowan, of Harlem, was too much for Frankie Gillon, the dark terrior of Baltimore. Gillon's middle took about four terrific punches and, after 35 seconds of the third round had passed, he folded up quietly on said middle and went to sleep.

Schmeling Spurns Louis, Fears Scars

By King Snell,
By a Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Proud of his classic features, which some wag once likened to those of Jack Dempsey after he had his face lifted, Max Schmeling, one-time heavyweight champion, but now of the cinema, shows signs of taking a run-out powder on his proposed fight with Joe Louis this fall. The reason for such decision by the handsome Hun, it is surmised, is his great desire to preserve the present contour of his noble pan for the edification of his movie public, and, having heard of the devastating, mug-destroying maulers possessed by the Detroit Negro, Max apparently has decided he wants none of him.

When Louis came out of the West to make a name and a fortune for himself and his backers, and with just a year of professional experience to back up his native ability, culminating in his decisive victory over Primo Carnera, promoters far and wide began to bid for his services. The battle with Carnera drew 60,000 cash customers in Yankee Stadium.

Would Be a Natural.

Madison Square Garden was getting none of this fat gate, but, it was reasoned, if it could get Schmeling to sign for a battle with Louis this fall it too would fall heir to some of the money that would be readily spent to see a fight between the two sluggers. The fight would be a natural. Jimmy Johnston, the Garden impresario, opined and forthwith dispatched Joe Jacobs to Germany with orders to sign the turbulent Teuton forthwith. Once Schmeling had attached his signature to the match, it was considered a foregone conclusion that Louis would readily agree to meet the former champion even though he was sentimentally attached to Mike Jacobs and the Twentieth Century Sporting Club

Germans Face Czechs Today In Net Test

Von Cramm and His Mates Only Slight Choices in Zone Finals.

By the Associated Press.

PRAHA, Czechoslovakia, July 11. Finalists in European zone Davis Cup competition, Germany and Czechoslovakia open their three-day tennis clash tomorrow for the right to play the United States in the interzone finals at Wimbledon starting July 20.

Tonight the Teutons, led by their titled ace, Baron Gottfried von Cramm, were rated only slight favorites over the Czechs, whose main hopes rest on Roderich Menzel.

The opening singles matches tomorrow will pit the giant Menzel against Heiner Henkel, young German, while Von Cramm, a finalist in the recent Wimbledon championships, will meet Jon Caska. These pairings will be reversed on the final day of play, Sunday.

Menzel and Josef Malacek will represent Czechoslovakia in the doubles Saturday, but the German pair remains in doubt. Hans Denker and K. Lund may be named or German officials may call on Von Cramm to team up with one or the other if Henkel's form indicates he can't beat Caska in the final singles match Sunday.

Germany is counting on Von Cramm to win both his singles matches although the Teuton ace may have all kinds of trouble with Menzel if the temperamental Czech, playing before a home crowd, should happen to have one of his good days. The Czechs seem to have the edge in doubles.

Assuming Von Cramm wins twice, Menzel defeats Henkel and the Czechs take the doubles, the issue would rest entirely on string players, Henkel and Caska.

Reds Hop on Vance To Beat Dodgers, 5-4

Cincinnati, July 11 (AP).—The Reds made it two straight over the Dodgers today by scoring 2 runs off relief pitcher Dazzy Vance in the eighth to win 5 to 4. Only 968 paying customers turned out for the daylight game in contrast to the paid attendance of 11,253 last night.

With the score tied at 3-3, Kiki Cuyler, playing his first game for the Reds, reached first on Linus Frey's error. Babe Herman forced him at second and Ival Goodman singled. Billy Sullivan followed with his second two-bagger of the game to bring in the winning runs.

The Dodgers outhit the Reds, getting to Paul Derringer for 12 blows, but they were scatteerd effectively to give the pitcher his twelfth victory of the season.

Parmelee Takes His 10th Triumph

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, July 11.—Roy Parmelee gained his tenth pitching victory of the season today and the Giants their second of their Western tour, but they had a stiff battle before they turned back the Pirates, 4 to 2, today.

Parmelee, who has lost only two decisions this year, held the Bucs to four hits as he bested the veteran Red Lucas on the hill. He had one burst of wildness, however, and that tied the score at 1-1 going into the eighth inning. The Giants cut loose with a four-hit three-run burst in that frame and won the game before Bill Swift could be hurried to Lucas' rescue.

Dizzy Dean Wins 14th As Phillies Bow, 5-4

St. Louis, July 11 (AP).—A delayed ninth inning attack, featured by a two-base hit by Pinchhitter Virgil Davis, today gave the Cardinals a 5-to-4 decision over the Phillies and Dizzy Dean his fourteenth victory of the season.

With Philadelphia leading 4-to-3 in the ninth, Bill De Lancey walked after two were out. Bucky Walters, who previously had allowed but six hits and kept them scattered, then passed Terry Moore. De Lancey and Moore both scored on Davis' double.

Dean gave 11 hits and his control was spotty. In the third he walked Walters and Allen in succession.

Joe Medwick hit two home runs and Ernie Orsatti and Johnny Vergez one each. The Cardinal homers came with bases empty, but Vergez hammered home Camilli in the eighth.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

HARD liquor and prize fighting are supposed to go hand in hand, like Mussolini and Haile Selassie, but the combination holds no fear for young Bobby Goldstein, who on Monday night will launch his professional fighting career here. Liquor salesman by day, fighter by night is the career he is planning for himself.

POVICH.

Goldstein, who never took a drink in his young life, has been purveying the goods of a Frankfort distillery to Washington stores for the past six months, but it's a long hard pull to the comforts of life that way, he reasons, and thus he's going to try to capitalize on the pair of fists that carried him to the national intercollegiate lightweight championship three years ago.

Young Mrs. Goldstein, his bride of eight months, is agreeable. She has seen Bobby fight and knows his love of fighting. It is all right with her if the family exchequer is tilted upward by the fruits of labor that her young husband likes.

But the elder Mrs. Goldstein—Mrs. B. Goldstein, of 4525 Arkansas avenue northwest—Bobby's mother, is still quite ignorant of the plans of her youngest son to follow the footsteps of her eldest into the professional prize ring. She reads only the Yiddish papers, you see, and Bobby's fame has not yet reached the point where it commands the Jewish prints. But she never wanted her boy, Bobby, to be a fighter.

SHE was never keen about the fistic exploits of her eldest boy, Isador, who under the nom de ring of Goldie Ahearn, rose to the lightweight championship of the A. E. F. in France and won high ranking as a lightweight contender on his return to America. Box fighting never appealed to the gentle little Mrs. Goldstein. Even when her boy Johnny boxed for the George Washington University varsity team she didn't like it and asked why did her boys want to fight?

Much rather would she have seen them on the stage like her second son, Sammy, who has been a featured hoofer for ten years on the best vaudeville circuits under the name of Sammy Lewis. Now, that was not so good, either, but it was better than box fighting.

But her youngest son, Bobby, a professional prize fighter—that is too bad. If he wanted to box for the University of Virginia, for his college, well, that was bad enough. And if he won the national intercollegiate championship, well, she was glad to see him get all the glory and the medals and his pictures in the paper and the Olympic tryouts and everything, but box fighting she did not think was good for her boys. Why did they do it?

But there was no stopping young Bobby. He had been reared within expectorating distance of the water bucket, the aroma of resin on gymnasium floors was in his nostrils almost before he was beyond his cradle days. Big Brother Goldie used to work out in the attic and young Bobby was teethed on a boxing glove, so to speak. It is the most natural sequence in the world that he turn prize fighter.

I SAW Bobby in training yesterday in a public workout at the Kayeucka Athletic Club on Fourteenth street where 50 ringworms watched him travel two fast rounds with Harry Dublinsky, the No. 2 junior welterweight of the world. And I saw the best-looking amateur fighter to come within the gaze of these eyes in something like 13 years of press-row observation. The kid is good.

That's what Dublinsky thought, too. For two rounds he was expressing wonder and amazement through the eye-slits in his headgear as young Bobby set him a merry pace, took his awful body raps and countered with a truly remarkable left hook—the left hook that won young Goldstein all of his fights but one in amateur ranks. Bobby was puffing at the finish, but so was Dublinsky.

And after it was over, Dublinsky asked about him, curious to know where this young amateur learned to box. He was surprised but not incredulous when Brother Goldie told him that Bobby had been a frequent visitor in Stillman's Gymnasium in New York where he put on the gloves with such as Tony Canzoneri, Barney Ross, Jimmy McLarnin and Jackie Kid Berg.

Why is Bobby turning pro? "Because"—and it's Bobby speaking—"I feel stronger, feel better now than I ever did in college. Because I was never in real good health when I was knocking over the amateurs and because I think I can lick any of the lightweights I've seen in these parts. Because Sally and I can use that money that goes with the lightweight championship of the world."

Benson Beats Hyndman In Pennsylvania Golf

Newtown Square, Pa., July 11 (AP). Jack Benson, of Pittsburgh, scored a major upset in the State amateur golf championship tournament today by eliminating William Hyndman, jr., Philadelphia district titleholder, 2 and 1, in the second round play at the Aronomink Country Club.

Yankee Finishes Last In French Boat Race

Le Havre, France, July 11 (AP).—The Boston sloop Yankee finished seventh and last today in the first of three 22-mile races over a four-cornered course for the Count of Paris Silver Cup.

The race was won by the British yacht Candida in 2 hours 11 minutes 27 seconds. Yankee's time was 2:21:42.

Vines May Play Perry On Wimbledon Court

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, July 11.—"Fred Perry versus Ellsworth Vines for the world tennis championship, Vines serving. Quiet please."

That's the announcement that will be heard through Wimbledon's loud speakers soon after the Davis Cup challenge round if an effort launched by King George's jubilee trust fund is successful.

Vines, the lanky Californian who turned professional in 1933 after a comparatively brief but meteoric sweep through amateur ranks, already has been approached and has indicated he would be willing to play. Nothing has been said officially to Perry yet but the promoters thought it likely he too would accept since the match would be for charity. Perry has been rated the world's greatest amateur for two years just as Vines tops the pros.

Vines will discuss the proposition when he arrives in London from Southport on Tuesday but he indicated today to the Associated Press that he would be glad to play.

"I'll be frank with you," he said. "I went into this thing to make a living but if this match is for charity, I guess that's different. I'd love to play Fred."

Even should the prospective opponents prove agreeable, permission still would have to be obtained from the British Lawn Tennis Association. The promoters believe, however, that the association would be willing to strain a point or two in view of the charitable and patriotic nature of the match.

The contest, should it eventuate, will mark the first time in tennis history that the leading professional has met the top-ranking amateur in a formal match. Bill Tilden, at the height of his amateur fame, once defeated Karel Kozeluh, then the best professional, in a match in France, but this was arranged on an entirely informal basis.

Red Sox Hurler Wins 10th as Chisox Ace Slams 2.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, July 11.—After Bob (Lefty) Grove earned his tenth victory of the season, by pitching the Boston Red Sox to a 4-to-3 win over Chicago, the White Sox sluggers fell on four of his battery mates to capture the other half of today's double-header, 10 to 2.

Jimmy Dykes' players made all of their five hits and registered all of their runs against Grove during the first three innings. Lefty's mates then came from behind and "Dib" Williams scored Grove with the winning run with two out in the ninth.

Zeke Bonura, who blasted out his sixteenth and seventeenth homers, poled the first circuit blow with two on against Long John Welch in the first inning of the second game. The Boston cause became hopelessly lost in the fourth when the slugging first sacker found "Dusty" Rhodes for the other one, which came with one on base.

Manager Joe Cronin, suffering with an ailing stomach, had to retire from the action during the sixth inning of the opener.

Vines Outhits Rowe, 14 to 7, But Myer's Error Paves Way For Run

Washington's 6 Tallies in Fourth Rout Rowe, Overcome Lead.

Visitors Outhit, 14 to 7, Rally in Eighth and Deadlock Count.

By Shirley Povich,

ELON HOGSETT, a Detroit relief pitcher, dragged his .143 batting average to the plate in the tenth inning yesterday, made his annual midsummer hit, and relieved the Nats of another ball game.

That hit was enough to make Buck Newsom throw his glove high in the air and work himself into a fine state of permissible disgust, for it was as tainted and luck-bespattered a hit as ever chiseled its way into the box score. The blow that beat the Nats, 7-6, was made not only by Hogsett, but made with a broken bat, that shattered in his hand as it wafted a lazy, lolling fly ball just out of reach of Shortstop Alan Strange in short left field.

Newsom, who had just completed a swell job of keeping the Tigers from winning the ball game in the eighth inning, was the victim not only of Hogsett but of Captain Buddy Myer, who committed his annual July error in that tenth inning at a time when most harm would come of it.

Muffs Easy One.

It was a town-lot muff by Myer of a grounder hit by Rogell, first up in the tenth, that put the Tigers' winning run on first base. Gerald Walker gambled with a sacrifice bunt on the third strike and pushed Rogell to second, and then it was that Hogsett confounded the Nats, the Tigers and the 3,000 in the stands with that broken-bat hit of his.

The lengths to which the Nats go to lose ball games these days are eloquently bespoken by the box score of the game which reveals that the Tigers made only 7 hits to 14 by Washington.

But against Irving Hadley, in the early innings, the Tigers were dealing strictly in extra-base blows. A home run by Charley Gehringer in the first, a pair of triples by Goose Goslin and Bill Rogell in the second, and Goslin's home run over the right-field wall in the third staked Rowe to a 4-0 lead.

Nats Stage Drive.

Then the Nats countered with a furious six-run assault in the fourth. Manush and Travis singled, Powell and Bolton filed out, Bluege walked to fill the bases and Hadley surprised all and sundry by whacking a single to left that drove in the first two runs. There followed a

Whitney's Motto, $12.20 Shot, Wins Suffolk Downs Feature

12,000 Watch Filly Score In Stretch

Frisky Matron Second After Early Lead; All Forlorn 3d.

By the Associated Press.

SUFFOLK DOWNS, Boston, July 11.—C. V. Whitney's three-year-old bay filly, Motto, accounted for the six-furlong feature on today's second-day card at the new Suffolk Downs track. Eddie Litzenberger gave the leggy daughter of Sir Gallahad III a good ride and her supporters in the 12,000 crowd were justified by cashing $12.20 on a winner's ticket.

The favored Frisky Matron, from the stable of C. W. Shaw, jr., jumped out front from the gate, but she was not able to hold this early command. All Forlorn took the lead midway in the route. Meanwhile, Litzenberger held his mount well in hand ju.. off the pace. Coming around the stretch turn he made her run and she made every stride a winning one to have a length between her and Frisky Matron at the wire.

Behind that horse, two and a half lengths in the ruck, came All Forlorn and none of the others ever threatened.

Empire City, July 11.—The Rhinebeck, a class "C" handicap for 3-year-olds, resulted in one of the biggest setbacks for the talent of the current meeting here this afternoon. Four horses went to the post for the mile and one-sixteenth jaunt, with C. V. Whitney's unreliable Rough Diamond, which recently figured in a dead heat with Below Zero, the even-money choice. The colt finished a distant last, while the Starmount Stable's Brindle, 12 to 1 outsider, drove to victory under little Joey Rosen.

The Tranquility Farm's Cross Ruff, third choice, was an easy second, beating Crete by five lengths for the place. Crete had eight lengths to spare over Rough Diamond. The winner ran the distance in 1:48 over a slow, drying-out track.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BARNSLEY, $14.60, $8.80, $7.20; PAUL JUNIOR, $58 60, $25.40; LIEUT. GREENOCK, $6 20.

BARNSLEY, unable to keep pace early, came to the outside in the last quarter-mile and, responding gamely to hard riding, wore down the leaders inside the last sixteenth, and drew clear at the close. PAUL JUNIOR, in the forefront throughout, held on willingly in the stretch drive. LIEUT. GREENOCK, hustled to the front, opened up a good lead, but was unable to cope with the closing challenges of the first two. ROWES CRUMP improved his position steadily and closed with good speed on the outside in the last three-sixteenths. MOTTLED, forced to work his way up on the outside, was unable to reach the leaders. ONUS was hard ridden all the way. HERONDAS saved ground at the stretch turn.

SECOND RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:45. Off at 2:49. Winner, E. T. Burke's br c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SANCTITY, $10.60, $6.40, $4.60; BOOCAP, $12.40, $8.00; NANKIN, $7.20.

SANCTITY, under steadying restraint while following the pace, wore down FAKE for the command and drew out steadily in the stretch run. BOOCAP, outpaced early, worked her way up steadily in the last three furlongs and finished courageously. NANKIN was well placed all the way and held on well in the drive. NOCTURNLABE suffered some interference nearing the far turn, but recovering gamely, came stoutly in the last quarter-mile. FAKE showed good speed, but weakened after going six furlongs. FOUR SPOT was never a factor. INTEGRITY, steadied along during the first half-mile, moved up when called upon, but dropped back steadily through the stretch.

THIRD RACE—Five furlongs. The Saugus. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:27. Off at 3:29½. Winner, Leo G. Mark's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAIDEN DREAM, $10.00, $5.20, $3.40; JOHN TIO, $6.40, $3.60; CHESSIE, $2.60.

MAIDEN DREAM, unable to keep up early, responded gamely to brisk urging in the stretch and, finishing resolutely, was up in the closing strides. JOHN TIO displayed speed from the start, was much used in racing with CHESSIE, and was unable to withstand the closing bid of the winner. CHESSIE, hard ridden all the way and holding to a prominent position, continued stoutly to the end. ABOVE BOARD showed good early speed, but dropped back after rounding the far turn. LADY GREENOCK, away slowly, closed some ground. SIGHTING BAR was never a threat. SANTA ANITA was outrun. APPLE TODDY tired.

FOURTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:04. Off at 4:06. Winner, Apache Stable's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PROPAGANDIST, $25.80, $12.60, $9.20; IDLE ALONG, $13.20, $8.60; DAVOC, $6.00.

PROPAGANDIST, a trailer for the first half-mile, began moving up after swinging around the far turn, moved up on the inside, swung to outside in the stretch and, closing with a rush, was up in the closing stride. IDLE ALONG, in nearest pursuit of the pacemaker, wore down AUNT FLOR for the lead after passing the furlong pole, and just failed to hold on long enough. DAVOC, prominently placed from the outset, held on stubbornly in the closing test. AUNT FLOR took command in the run to the first turn, was steadied along under slight restraint, faltering in the closing furlong. RED ROAMER was never prominent.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. The North Shore. Purse, $1,200. For 3-year-olds and upward, fillies and mares. Start good from stall gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 4:40. Off at 4:44. Winner, C. V. Whitney's b. f. (3), by Sir Gallahad III—Malapert. Trained by T. J. Healey. Value to winner, $800; second, $250; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23, 0:46 2-5, 1:12. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOTTO, $12.20, $5.20, $3.20; FRISKY MATRON, $3.40, $2.40; ALL FORLORN, $3.00.

MOTTO, outrun through the back stretch, began moving up steadily leaving the back stretch, swung to the outside of the leaders at the stretch turn and, closing resolutely, wore down FRISKY MATRON and was going away at the end. FRISKY MATRON had speed from the start, disposed of ALL FORLORN, but was unable to cope with the superior late speed displayed by the winner. ALL FORLORN had speed from the outset, was unable to overtake the pacemaker, and weakened from her impost in the last three-sixteenths. MISS PREMIER, well placed early, tired.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:20. Off at 5:24½. Winner, W. Ridenour's b. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LANIER, $13.80, $6.40, $5.60; GOLD STEP, $6.40, $5.00; AILEEN C., $7.80.

LANIER, under slight restraint while following the pace, responded gamely to hard urging, moved up on the outside and, hard ridden through the stretch, outlasted GOLD STEP at the end. The latter prominently placed the entire way, assumed a slight lead after disposing of IMMUNE, and just failed to last. AILEEN C. outbroke her field, lacked speed to maintain her position, but held on well in the closing test. MIXED PARTY was prominently placed throughout.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:54. Off at 5:55. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GREY GLADE, $4.60, $2.80, $2.40; DARKLING, $2.60, $2.40; BRIGHT BIRD, $3.20.

GREY GLADE moved to the front in the first few strides while racing slightly restrained, increased her advantage steadily on the run down the back stretch and held away to the end. DARKLING, permitted to settle into her best stride early in the first five furlongs, closed stoutly, but was unable to reach the winner. BRIGHT BIRD had good speed, but was unable to keep pace with the first two. YAP went evenly. GUIDING LIGHT tired.

which promoted his soiree with Carnera.

Today there is tear shedding and teeth gnashing in the Garden promotorial offices, for as some sage once said, "the best-laid plans of men and mice aft gang aglee" which in a manner of speaking is about what has happened to the promotion plans of the Garden for a Schemling-Louis fight.

Refuses to Sign.

This morning Jimmy Johnston took his telephone receiver from its hook, placed it to an attentive ear and listened. Joe Jacobs was speaking from Berlin, and the gist of his story was to the effect that Schmeling had refused to sign the documents to meet Louis at any time or any place. In fact, he wanted none of the Brown bomber; instead, he preferred to retain his natural beauty and preserve his face for the animated pictures.

This startling announcement has put Johnston in the position of a gentleman in a quandary, but he is not licked yet. Says the suave Jimmy, "I'm just beginning to fight."

Sleuths Swamp NRA Nine, 19 to 5, to Increase League Lead

Colliflower And Morris Leaders

Three Hurlers Pounded for 15 Hits; Russell Clouts Homer.

THE baseball team from the Bureau of Investigation gave its chief, Edgar J. Hoover, something to smile about yesterday when it routed the vaunted NRA nine, 19 to 5, to increase its lead for second-half Post Association honors in the United States Government League.

Ed Colliflower and Walter Morris were the leaders in a 15-hit slugging assault against the combined but futile efforts of Earl Mattingly, Lefty Stevens and Bennie Spigel.

Ed Russell's home run clout was the only bright spot in the play of the crestfallen Eagles.

JAMES C. BUCHANAN, president of the Northern Virginia League, of The Washington Post Association.

Split Season For Virginia Loop Nines

Suggestion of Buchanan Is Popular With Teams; League Head Busy.

THE interest and enjoyment of the baseball fans are paramount considerations that have always been uppermost in the mind of James C. Buchanan, who divides his spare time conducting a political campaign for a seat on the Arlington County Board and guiding the destinies of the Northern Virginia Baseball League.

When the fans' interest in one of the Virginia league sectional races began to lag due to the fact that the leading Ballston club had assumed an overwhelming advantage, Buchanan invited the practical suggestion of a split season in this section and it was acted upon with popular unanimity by the teams. Enthusiasm among the group of teams is now at a high pitch with no less than five of the six teams on the heels of the other in a tight race. Hence there was no cause for a split season in this section.

Buchanan Seeks Office.

Buchanan, an overseas veteran, and well-known figure in local baseball ranks a few decades ago, seeks the Democratic nomination to the County Board of Arlington County, Va., and if he is half as popular with the voters as with the fans and players he would would win by a walkaway. Old baseball fans recall him as a better-than-ordinary second baseman of the Andrews Paper Co. team in the Commercial loop, and the fast Mohawks in the independent ranks. His play earned him a trial in the Blue Ridge League but the outbreak of the World War interrupted a bright baseball career.

It has not been infrequent for the Virginia league to spend Sunday afternoons during the past three months making a tour of several of the towns were The Post games were being played. Buchanan or simply "Buc" as some call him is well liked. Baseball is his big hobby. He is a member of the Falls Church Democratic Club and the Democratic Club of Arlington. He also belongs to the Arlington Post of the American Legion.

single to left by Kuhel, a triple to right by Stone, and a single to center by Myer and the Nats had a 6-4 lead.

But they were strictly a one-punch ball team yesterday and in those last six innings Rowe and Hogsett held them scoreless.

Hadley held that lead until the eighth, and then his pitching went sour. He walked Greenberg and had a three-and-nothing count on Goslin, when Bucky Harris waved Leon Pettit into the box. Compared even to Hadley, Pettit was an awful burden to be inflicted upon the Nats. He finished the job of walking Goslin to put the tying run on base, and then walked Rogell to fill the sacks with none as yet out.

Against Pinch-Hitter Gerald Walker, Pettit pitched a single to center field and the score was tied at 6 to 6.

With runners still on first and second and none out, Pettit pitched three balls and two strikes to Owen, when Harris routed him out of there and called Newsom from the bull pen.

Newsom Comes Through.

Then Newsom brought to bear a fine display of pinch pitching to retire Owen on a fly, dispose of Rowe on a force play and Fox on a grounder to third which Ossie Bluege knocked down with his chin after a bad hop and picked up hastily for a sensational put-out at first.

The Nats missed a grand chance to win the ball game in the eighth. Kuhel doubled with one out and Manager Cochrane replaced Rowe with the left-handed Hogsett. Pinch Hitter Fred Schulte was no help, but Myer and Manush walked to fill the bases. Alan Strange, who had been sent into the infield when Travis was hit by a pitched ball, relieved the tenseness of the situation for the Tigers by flying out mildly to center field.

Thus it was that the ball game wore into the tenth and ended on the sour notes of Myer's error and Hogsett's hit.

Mrs. Moody Raps Rumors, Declares She Won't Retire

By the United Press.

London, July 11 (U.P.).—Rumors circulated in the United States that Helen Wills Moody plans to retire from tournament play are untrue, the seven-times all-England tennis champion said today.

The San Francisco girl, who returned to play this year and won at Wimbledon, said she had "absolutely no plans" for her future. She said she did not know whether she would play in the Wightman Cup matches (Great Britain vs. United States) or in the American National.

"I don't even know when I'll sail for New York," she said, "but I expect it will be within a fortnight."

Hess Is Victor Over Welsh In 2 Sets

Wins By Scores of 6-2, 6-4; Parker Is Extended By Surface.

By the Associated Press.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., July 11.—Frankie Parker abandoned his weak forehand today and with chops from the right and his dependable backhand, plus his opponent's inability to seize opportunities, finally defeated Harold Surface, of Kansas City, 7—5, 8—6, to enter the semifinal round of the third annual invitation tennis tournament.

Tomorrow Parker, the fourth ranking player in the country and winner of the first two tournaments here, will meet Wilbur E. Hess, of Fort Worth, Tex., in the upper half semifinal and he can not come much closer to defeat than today without suffering it.

Hess, the new national intercollegiate champion, played much faster, cleaner and more convincing tennis than Parker and defeated T. Welsh, of Rockville, Md., National Public Parks titleholder, in straight sets, 6—2, 6—4.

Harris Plays Hale.

The other semifinalists tomorrow will be Charles Harris, of West Palm Beach, Fla., and J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J. Harris outclassed Herbert L. Bowman, of New York, in a 6—3, 6—4 baseline contest, while Hall accounted for William B. Reese, of Atlanta, 5—7, 7—1, 6—3.

All the interest today centered on Parker's match. Surface had carried him to four sets in the Kentucky State semifinal two weeks ago, after which Parker was beaten by Harris in the final, but the Missourian just couldn't take advantage of his several opportunities to win this afternoon.

He led 3—1, 4—3 and 5—4 in the first set, lost set point in the tenth game, led at 30—0 and 40—15 in the eleventh and then made four errors in a row to drop the set. In the second set he also led Parker 3—2, 4—3 and 5—3, but then went to pieces, losing five of the remaining six games.

Gets 7 of 12 Breaks.

How poor the service was is shown by the 12 breaks, Parker getting seven of them of which three came together to snatch the victory.

Parker at 4—5 in the first set pulled out the next two games after each had gone to deuce three times and Surface had four chances to take the set. He lost seven games in which he held the last and stood at game point. Weak defense and easy errors prolonged half a dozen games and his chances for an easier victory. Surface upset Frankie time after time with soft drop shots after sending him back to the base line, but the shot failed him three times at game point near the end of the fray. It was almost entirely a back-court battle. Parker a few times went to the net, but a succession of clean passes quickly forced him to stop that.

Three Washington players fared better than Welsh in the doubles. Lawrence A. Baker, jr., paired with Paul Ferber, of Bay Head, N. Mex., defeated R. Hanley of New York, and Jack Crosley of Spring Lake, 6—2, 6—3. Hugh Lynch and Fred C. Anderson of New York defeated J. W. Parker and William Blair, jr., of Shrewsburg, N. J., 6—0, 6—1, and Lieut. Dolf Meulheisen, familiar on local courts paired with Maj. R. C. Van Vliet, of Shrewsbury, N. Y., Army Champion, to defeat Frank Nesbitt and Ringling Kilpatrick, of Spring Lake, 6—0, 6—0. All were first-round matches.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodstock, Va., July 11.—A large crowd saw Mount Jackson and Strasburg today in a 12-10 slugfest. Jim Shannon, who relieved Branner in the fourth, emerged the winning pitcher allowing only one hit and fanning five batters.

The league leaders took the lead in the first part of the game, but a rally in the sixth tied the score when Strasburg scored six runs on three hits and a walk, the other tallies coming through errors made by Mount Jackson.

Taneytown Turns Back Emmitsburg Nine, 10-1

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Taneytown, Md., July 11.—Taneytown easily defeated Emmitsbug in the county league in a postponed game played yesterday, 10 to 1. The victory put Taneytown into a tie with Union Bridge for third place in the pennant race.

Fleagle went the route for the north county team and pitched a good game with the exception of the second and third innings, when Taneytown chalked up eight runs. After the third, Fleagle settled down and held the Carroll County team to one run.

Virginia Open Delayed Waits for Cruickshank

Richmond, Va., July 11 (AP).—The Virginia open golf tournament has been postponed a week, and will be played August 10-11 instead of August 3-4, in order that Bobby Cruickshank, defending champion, may compete.

Cruickshank, winner for the past two years, has contracted to go to Toledo with Tommy Armour in the national four-ball matches at that time and requested that the dates for the State open be changed in order that he might defend his title.

The Old Dominion Club, Newport News, to which the tournament had been awarded on condition a charge could be made for spectators, willingly consented to the delay.

Diamond Available.

The Roosevelt High Stadium diamond is available for junior games from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., and for senior games between 6 p. m. and dark. See Richard Spear at the stadium for reservations.

Let's Go Fishing . . .

By M. W. Meier.

WHENEVER we go fishing and fail to report unusual luck, we get a flock of calls from lucky anglers assuring us that we ought to have been with them.

One such call came from a stag party of Southern Railway officials who spent the week-end down at the Gooses. In a few hours' time they landed close to 300 croakers, averaging around the 3-pound mark. They could have caught more had they not ran out of bait.

We haven't the names of all the men, but included in the party were D. H. Reed, H. K. Murphy, A. E. Tate and Messrs. Padgett and Green. There were others to the number of 13. The crowd has a stag fishing party every fortnight on the bay.

A long-distance call just came in from Capt. Dick Lore, of Solomons Island, reporting excellent weather and no end of croakers biting again. Yesterday every one of the Lore fleet of boats was out and one and all brought back huge catches of hardheads and a sprinkling of weaks weighing from 2 to 3 pounds.

Kingfish Gets Big Catch.

One Washington party, out in the Kingfish—a boat we especially like because of its size and convenience—consisted of James Kolonturos, Elbert and Thomas Robertson, Frank Crovo, James Santorros and Owen Crowen. In less than three hours' time this party landed 358 hardhead, most of which ran around the 3-pound mark. They fished late in the afternoon out in the middle of the channel.

The last few days of stormy weather seem to have been just what was needed to make the fish bite again. When the surface is too hot, fish stick to the deep holes where there seems to be more oxygen. When rain comes, they flock to the surface to get needed change.

Solomons Island will be a popular spot this coming week-end and boats will be hard to get unless reserved in advance. When you do make such a reservation be sure to either keep your word or else notify the boatmen of any change in your plans. It makes it tough on others if you place a reservation and fail to show up.

Bay and Ocean Prospects.

Croakers are pretty well distributed now about the bay. Go just about anywhere for them. For rockfish hit Colonial Beach or the creeks north of Point Lookout. There are spawning fish now in most of them and the only reason more haven't been reported is because few anglers are trying for them.

The Shenandoah, upper Potomac, Rapidan and Jackson Rivers at this writing, are reported as clear with few anglers out for black bass.

Ocean City and Wachapreague continue to report excellent catches of weaks, blues and channel bass. From the Delaware breakwaters come tall tales of huge drums, croakers and weaks being caught at Lewes Beach. The black drum has been unknown, we are told, in these waters for the past seven years.

We hope to hit Ocean City over the week-end. We're itching to tangle up with a few blues.

Browns, Macks Split Double Bill

Philadelphia, July 11 (AP).—The Athletics and St. Louis Browns split a double-header today, the Athletics winning the first game, 7 to 3, and the Browns the second 9 to 6.

Whitney Wilshere, Mack left-hander starting his first full season in the majors, won the first game for his ninth victory of the year against four defeats.

Four runs scored in the first inning to wipe out the Browns' lead of 2 to 0 sent the A's ahead in the opening contest and gave them a lead they never surrendered.

St. Louis won the second with a 5-run rally in the sixth inning that broke a 4-to-4 tie.

Eric McNair had a home run and six singles. Jimmy Foxx hit two homers in the nightcap and Clift and Coleman each had one.

Sloan Defends 'Big Business;' Assails Tax

To Limit Size Is to Add to Unemployment, Says Gen. Motors Head.

New York, July 11.—In a special message to the stockholders of General Motors Corporation, Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president, said yesterday:

"I am sending you this special message at this time for the purpose of calling your attention to a very specific and, to my mind, a most important matter. The subject affects you directly, as a stockholder of General Motors Corporation. It affects you indirectly in many other ways. It vitally concerns the business interests of the country and hence influences the welfare of all. I refer to the proposal now before the Congress for a graduated corporation income tax, with rates ranging from 10 per cent to 17½ per cent.

Many Small Holders.

"If we are to assume, and we have a right to assume, that one of the underlying motives is to 'soak the rich,' the question arises, whether the rich are the only ones to be really soaked? For example, General Motors Corporation, representing a market value of $1,700,000,000, is owned directly and indirectly by some 415,000 stockholders. Holdings of more than 150,000 of these stockholders represent amounts of ten shares or less, involving a maximum investment of $350 each. The largest American business corporation, with a stockholder list of approximately 570,000, is stated to have no stockholder whose holdings are even equal to 1 per cent of the total. This is quite generally true of American 'business bigness.'

"The facts are that the savings of the masses are importantly represented in the stockholding interests of our large business enterprises. The stockholder lists of hundreds of big corporations show that such stock investments have become a secondary savings bank. The fact that a corporation has a large income does not mean that all its stockholders have large incomes. The fact that any corporation has a small income does not mean that its owner or owners have small incomes.

"We might look at the question from another standpoint. 'Business bigness,' as applied to industry, mean mass production. Mass production means nothing more or less than the concentration of great resources that enables luxuries to be turned into necessities and new luxuries to be continually created. The most humble citizen in the most humble community today enjoys conveniences that even a few years ago were denied to all. That is what mass production has accomplished. Mass production involves tremendous expenditures in engineering, special tooling and machinery.

"Even more important, behind all this, is research, which, as the result of large expenditures, is continually exploring and capitalizing the secrets of nature, making it possible to create new luxuries to be turned into new necessities, thus providing additional employment for millions. But notwithstanding these great expenditures, the cost per unit is low because of the large number of units produced, and hence the selling price is brought within the reach of an increasingly large number of people.

Employment Chief Problem.

"Let us look at the problem from the standpoint of employment. The paramount problem of today, not only in this country, but in all countries, is the reemployment of the unemployed. If we are to restrict the ability of industry to produce things in a big way, at the same time we lose our ability to produce efficiently. As costs rise, selling prices go up. As selling prices mount, our ability to consume is reduced, foreign competition is favored, production is reduced and unemployment increased. To destroy, or limit 'business bigness,' is to assure increased unemployment.

"Sooner or later it must be recognized by all that the tremendous Government expenditures of yesterday, today and tomorrow, must be met by increased taxation. Destroying business bigness, or soaking the rich will not balance the budget. The amount required is far too big. These particular resources are far too small. Every one must, of necessity, pay, and every one will pay—consciously, or not. You, as a stockholder, whether you own one or more shares, are bound to receive less because of the fact that the Government continually demands more. As a matter of fact, you are bound not only to receive less, but what you receive will bring you less, because everything you purchase and every service you use, will cost more due to the fact that the Government continually demands more. Government does not create wealth—it dissipates wealth. As to whether this continually increasing burden is necessary, is quite a different matter. We are dealing with facts as they exist."

Market Moves Of the Day Seen In Brief Review

What the Stock Market Did.

	Thurs.	Wed.
Advances	195	360
Declines	435	203
Unchanged	160	208
Total issues	790	771

Stocks—Profit-taking skids sped the market downward and recent leaders lost from fractions to 2 points. Late support drove a number of issues up from the day's lows but failed to level substantial net losses. Alcohols, were the firmest, while metals and chain stores showed scattered strength. Sales below a million for the first time this week for a total of 995,460 shares.

Bonds—Speculative rail loans were heavy, while other corporates steered a fairly even course. Profit taking was blamed. Federals were in demand, although new offering announcements unsettled the list temporarily. Transfers expanded to $12,200,000.

Curb—Prices were lower in sympathy with the trend on the big board. Transactions fell off to 193,000 shares.

Grains—Despite wide-spread comment that the Government crop estimate was high by 45,000,000 bushels, the report precipitated sharp setbacks in all grains. July wheat, 83⅜, and July corn, 81¾.

Cotton—Liquidation prompted by continued favorable weather shaded prices. July last at 12.03.

Sugar—Raw sugar barely steady at 3.29. Refined unchanged at 5.25 for the fine granulated.

Coffee—Spot coffee was quiet and closed at 6⅞ for the Rio No. 7, and 8 for the Santos No. 4.

Bar silver—Up ⅝ of a cent in New York and closed at 69⅜ cents per ounce. In London prices were up 3-16d per ounce and final at 31 5-16d (69.98 cents).

Bar gold—Off 3 pence to 140 shillings 8 pence ($34.89).

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, July 11.—The recession in financial markets, which has sputtered for the past week or so and been much talked of among followers of market technic, got under way. Stock had little rallying power, although they were allowed to ease gradually lower. No heavy selling movement broke out, and the turnover was not much in excess of a million shares. One group was about as yielding as another, but for all the setback Wall Street maintained its bullish feeling. Bonds also had their spell of weakness. Commodity markets were mostly lower. September wheat closed 1⅛ cents lower at 84¼ cents a bushel.

The old malaise of anxiety over public utilities broke out again here and there in the financial district as various utility matters came up for discussion and voting in Congress. The public utility share section as a consequence was inclined to soften. The markets realize that they can't take much for granted on the part of Congress, any more than they can predict Administration policies.

The situation is nevertheless fundamentally much more reassuring than it was a year or two years ago. Even on the point of inflation, if that comes it is likely to work up on us gradually, and not come from some unexpected and overt act, such as a great bogus money printing effort. Moreover, no less a personage than the Secretary of the Treasury has admitted that the emergency is over, so far as the depression is concerned, which ought to clear the landscape of further talk of managed economy, managed currency, dictatorships and managed lives.

Tax Problem to Be Met.

Markets in general now have to face more removal work than new construction of a bizarre order. An unpredictable tax program is before them, to be sure, and Congress and the Administration have not yet done with efforts at so-called social reform, but the spirit of the times is changing. The AAA, the TVA and many other A's to Z's are doomed, and it will be the business of markets to readjust themselves to conditions without these hindrances to progress. The progress of the country from artifice to Nature is bound to be slow and erratic, but when it is accomplished business and finance will be on a far stronger footing than they are at present.

Silver smoldered in London; apparently the recent buying by the United States Treasury cleaned up all expiring options held by speculators, for it was reported as unnecessary today to give the market support, and the price was firmer. Given the appearance of stability for a while, doubtless speculation again will come in, particularly if someone on the other side gets a hint from this side that some more price lifting is about due.

Silver Trend Upward.

So long as the resources of the Treasury hold out, theoretically the silver market will tend to rise. At any rate, the mining interests here are proceeding on that assumption. Their share of the spoils after all will be small compared to the gleanings of miners and speculators in options outside this country.

Dollars were firm generally. Italian currency again was soft, and so long as war talk sounds as it does, little confidence will be shown in Italian securities or currency. If actual conflict comes, furthermore, the possibility that other countries will be involved would constitute a new obstacle to world-wide business recovery.

Meanwhile the Bank of France continues to draw back gold. This week's increase was 255,000,000 francs, according to the Bank of France's statement, but the month end brought a rise in circulation. The power of the Bank of France to stay on gold has been amply demonstrated; what is uncertain is the ability of the country to withstand the further deflation and slack business that is inevitable. The power of the French people in that respect probably will prove to be great.

An Open Letter to the President From a Democrat.

Dear President:

I am a Democrat. Up until the last few months I have been a red-hot Roosevelt Democrat, but I am beginning to wobble. In fact, there are moments when you make me feel like a Republican, which is about as bad as a Democrat can feel.

* * * *

It is because I am a Democrat that I take my stub pen in hand to offer a few suggestions to you from the standpoint of a voter who thinks you are losing a lot of support through wild pitching and a change in style. First of all, Mr. Roosevelt, you are giving an impression of obstinacy, which is doing you no good out there on the mound. The impression I get is that of a promising southpaw who, when he is not having things his own way, gets very peeved and upset.

* * * *

It hurts me to see you apparently taking the position that it is your personal ball game and that you will not stand for any interference or suggestions. You are team manager, captain and pitcher, I admit, but you have a way of ordering the other players around that is costing you friends. If you would only act as if you thought the other fellow might be right once in a while, it would be a relief to me as a Democrat.

* * * *

I think you made a big error when you insisted on the right to use the "bean ball" on the public utilities instead of just striking them out the regular way. You had the poor guys stiff from worry and apprehension anyhow.

* * * *

It seems to me that you also showed poor judgment when you insisted on exclusive use of speed against that sick batter, J. Henry Taxpayer, when you were already slowballing him to death. The guy has suffered so much and is in such a bad way that it didn't make any friends for you when you ordered that he slide to first on the third strike and that the whole team be there to spike him.

* * * *

You went into the box with the greatest following in years. You still have a big part of it, but even the Loyal Rooters wish you would pull yourself together and stop trying to put all you have on every pitched ball. After all, there are several more innings to be played, and everybody likes to see the batter get a break once in a while.

* * * *

Hoping you will bench some of those Potomac advisers and get back your sense of proportion, I am the Old Time Democrat,

ELMER TWITCHELL.

Why Peggy! I thought that I was your father tearing into this house...slamming doors and....oh darling, why squash your new hat down on that table? What happened?
Oh nothing. Anyhow, not much.
I saw Hartford Oakdale downtown. Walking along with that Count. When I walked across the street to say hello, he was too busy talking to even nod to me.
And that...that threw you into hysterics?
Oh Mother, you don't understand. There were three gawky looking women standing there who started to giggle. I felt so silly.
Felt silly! Well that part of it is certainly easy to understand.
Well anyhow, it won't happen again. I'm.... Oh Mother, I know it sounds just trivial to you, but....
Imagine! You! Tossing your head. Batting your eyes. Flying into a tantrum. Oh darling, please don't imagine you're the only one who feels terribly silly about this dippy affair.

On the Air Today

It was all a false alarm — that story a few weeks ago that Ruth Etting would retire from radio and other public appearances. As a matter of record, the "Queen of the College Prom" has just signed a new contract for another year on the air. And a contract to make a picture has been thrown in for good measure.

Her show tonight with Red Nichols and his orchestra will present Georgia Coleman, Olympic diving champion, WMAL, at 7:30.

Just to show you how far from retiring Ruthie was — the College Prom henceforth will be on a coast-to-coast network instead of East and Middle West.

It looks as though it might have been a case of La Etting saying, "Boys, I'm going to the West Coast to make a picture, and you can either pick up Ruthie out there or not pick up Ruthie at all."

Dick Powell will have Claudette Colbert as his guest attraction again tonight in Hollywood Hotel, WJSV, at 8. A preview of scenes from the first picture Colbert has made since winning the Motion Picture Academy award — called "She Married Her Boss"—will be contributed to the program with Melvyn Douglas in support.

Here is one of those airings by Hugh Johnson and a worthy opponent in which both sides of the question will be heard in one sitting. Tonight Representative James W. Wawsworth, of New York, and the colorful general debate on "The Blessings of Stability" before the Virginia Institute of Public Affairs, and broadcast at 9 p. m. through WMAL. It's the Constitution and the New Deal again.

Vivienne Segal returns to an old microphone spot tonight when she sings once again in "Waltz Time," WRC, at 8 . . . WOL is airing an international program tonight from Germany . . . Irene Rich's playlet sounds like an old Bill Hart "Western"—"The Terror of the Plains," WMAL at 7.

WJSV has been doing a little thinking about the daytime music situation and has arrived at what appears to this observer to be a commendable decision. Beginning next week four periods of the day will be set up for diversified musical programs—periods designed to remain inviolate from time demands by the commercial department.

The schedule, Mondays through Fridays, follows: 9:30 to 9:45 a. m., "Morning Melodies;" 12 to 1 p. m., Luncheon Music; 4:30 to 4:45 p. m., Musical Novelettes, and 6 to 6:15 p. m., Dinner Music.

• • • •

The new policy on these programs will provide a variety of types of musical entertainment—a little orchestra, a little popular, some organ and trio and a wide range of vocal and instrumental combinations.

After four days of WMAL's "Curbstone Queries," the sidewalk interviews conducted in front of The Post Building each noon, the members of The Post staff who do the querying are beginning to wonder what will happen next.

Thursday noon Shirley Povich was asking casual passersby what they thought ought to be done about the Washington big league baseball situation. One man Povich questioned gave his name as Herbert Gediman. Povich used to know Gedimans in his home town up in Maine.

After the broadcast it developed that Gediman had lived in Bath, Me., Povich's home for years; came to Washington the same year Povich did, and had actually lived in the same apartment building here for the last three years!

"Just like old home week," Shirley remarked.

Today's "Curbstone Queries" will be conducted by The Post's Carlisle Bargeron, who writes "Along the Potomac" on the page opposite editorials. The question will have to do with President Roosevelt's chances in 1936.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

BAKER.

This class is the result of efforts to obtain in the Civil Service an adequate supply of the best brains of each generation, broadly trained in the British universities. From the beginning it was destined for the most responsible positions involving eventually the most difficult kinds of administrative operations, as described by the Royal Commissions on the Civil Service.

The total of the administrative class is small. Before the war it was less than 500. At present it is little more than 1,000 in a total personnel of more than 300,000, excluding the industrial staffs. Prior to 1914 its members were drawn almost exclusively directly from the universities with Oxford and Cambridge, of course, leading. Since the war there has been more freedom to advance from the lower classes, but the bulk is still drawn straight from the universities on the basis of an exceedingly difficult academic examination open only to men and women between 22 and 24.

These candidates are intended to represent, and generally have represented a special "order" whose main business is to advise the ministers on problems of policy, to reflect broadly on all types of administrative questions and to assume responsibility for the orderly and effective administration of the great departments.

Their record is a brilliant contribution to British administration, as well as to the fashioning of British policy in many of its aspects. They are somewhat "brain trusters," who have proven their ability to hold responsible positions.

A description of administrative class duties is given by one of the units of the royal commission on the civil service, excerpts of which follow:

"In the board of education, it consists in the supervision of the public system of education in England and Wales and in the promotion * * * of the various types of education * * * in those countries.

"In the minisrty of health administrative work consists in the supervision and general direction of the public health and other local government services in England and Wales. In the inland revenue department administrative work is concerned with the construction, modification and application of direct taxation and is to an important extent economic in character.

Phases of Work Explained.

"In the general postoffice administrative work consists on the one hand in the determination and working out of policy in relation to a gigantic public utility system rendering many different forms of service, and on the other in the higher management of a personnel of some 230,000 people * * * In the treasury it consists in the management of the national exchequer, the financial supervision of the expenditure of all departments, and in the control (which should be distinguished from management) of the entire personnel of the civil service."

Describing the general features of the work of the administrative class, the reports alludes to: 1. The advice to the minister. 2. The formulation of policy. No. 2 is explained as follows:

"The business of the Government, if it is to be well done, calls for the steady application of long and wide views to complex problems: for the pursuit, as regards each and every subject matter, of definite lines of action, mutually consistent, conformed to public opinion and capable of being followed continuously while conditions so permit and of being readily adjusted when they do not.

Decisions Have Consequences.

"Almost any administrative decision may be expected to have consequences which will endure or emerge long after the period of office of the Government by which or under whose authority it is taken. It is the peculiar function of the Civil Service, and the special duty of the administrative class of that service in their day to day work to set these wider and more enduring considerations against the exigencies of the moment, in order that the parliamentary convenience of today may not become the parliamentary embarrassment of tomorrow. This is the primary justification of a permanent administrative service.

"Vacillation, uncertainty and inconsistency are conspicuous symptoms of bad administration. The formation of policy in this limited sense—subject always to the control of the minister and to the supreme authority of Parliament—is typical of administrative work in all departments and in relation to all subject matters whether of greater or of lesser importance.

"Thus the efficient performance of the administrative work of the various departments calls in all cases for a trained mental equipment of a high order, while in the particular case powers developed in some particular direction are needed. In some spheres, what is most wanted is judgment, savoir-faire, insight, and fair-mindedness; in others, an intellectual equipment capable of the ready master of complex and abstruse problems in, for instance, taxation or other economic subjects; in others, imagination and constructive ability."

Pay scales and other aspects of the administrative class will be discussed tomorrow.
